It is hardly necessary in this report to repeat in detail what is already so familiar from bulletins, lectures and articles in THE FRIEND. Briefly, it may be said that to choose, train, equip, send and maintain a large group of Americans abroad has involved a great burden of work; but with the satisfactory result that American Friends are now represented in France and Russia by American doctors, nurses and social workers amounting in all to about one hundred and seventy-four men and women. For the expenses of these workers, and for the increased cost of the work which their presence entails, the Committee is entirely responsible. The Service Committee has also assumed and extended the financial responsibility for contributions which Friends of this and other Yearly Meetings had been making since 1914 to the general expenses of the War Victims' Relief Committee.

In the creation and continuous development of the Service Work, the Peace Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting has had from the beginning an active share. At present seven members represent the Peace Committee on the American Friends' Service Committee and share with representatives of other bodies of Friends in determining its policies. In making campaigns for funds and in organizing the sewing and knitting work the Peace Committee bears to the American Friends' Service Committee somewhat the relation of a Quarterly Meeting to a Yearly Meeting—that is, we have agreed to take charge of these activities of the Service Committee in our territory. This arrangement enables us to stand solidly behind the work of the Service Committee and at the same time to carry on independent lines of work—many of them started before it was formed. Thus of the $178,000 that has been given for our work in the past nine months, $165,000 has been turned over directly to the Service work from Philadelphia Yearly Meeting. On the other hand, about $11,000 has been spent on local activities, such as agriculture, food conservation, the relief of aliens and sewing and knitting.

As most members of the Yearly Meeting are aware, a new campaign for contributions is now being made by our Committee. Had the work of reconstruction remained on the same scale as in the Twelfth Month last, no new effort to raise money would have been necessary at this time; but the work is growing. A special call for three hundred more men has been cabled from Europe and the famine in Russia, with its urgent appeal, claims both our interest and action. The reserve of English Friends, having been depleted, they must look to America for greater help in the future than in the past. We must plan for this, and for such possibilities as the release by the War Department of our Conscientious Objectors, who are now in camp. There is no doubt that in the various responsibilities and activities of the Service Committee, American Friends have undertaken a work, which, whatever it may entail, must be carried through at any cost.

Not only contributions of money are needed; but generous expenditure of time and effort in more practical ways.

As the result of canning and drying done last summer by individuals and local groups—material and labor both being donated—it was possible to send to France a valuable gift of vegetables and fruits consisting of a hundred pounds of dried and two hundred and eighty quarts of canned goods. The Committee hopes that groups of women and girls may again be formed who will agree from time to time during the summer to prepare the fruits and vegetables which farmers may be willing to donate, and that this year a larger gift of fruit and vegetables may be sent abroad. The diet in many places, where the American Friends' Service Committee has workers, is reported to be monotonous. Preserved fruits are greatly appreciated, owing to the scant allowance of sweets; but they cost more to prepare than the dried products, and unless put up in tins are more difficult of transportation.

Those of us who stay at home can scarcely realize with what appreciation our workers in other lands receive such gifts of food in addition to the frequent shipments of clothing.

As early as 1914, sewing and knitting groups were formed in our various neighborhoods to make garments for war sufferers. In 1917, this work was taken over by the Peace Committee and has grown constantly as more local groups have been formed and existing groups have become better organized. At present there are about forty such groups and between two thousand and twenty-five hundred garments are being forwarded monthly to the national warehouse.

While the hearts of many have been going out to the sick and suffering in Europe, the realization has come home to others that there are, at our own doors, opportunities in plenty to relieve suffering and carry a peace message of good-will.

During the hot summer days, a group of seven young women made the crippled children in a city hospital forget their troubles for a while in playing games and listening to stories.

Through the kindness of the Friends' Neighborhood Guild, about sixty gallons of vegetables, which were prepared last summer, have been offered for sale this winter somewhat below the market price to poor families in the neighborhood who were hard pressed by the increased cost of living.

About three hundred complete baby outfits, each consisting of fifteen pieces, have been made and distributed through charitable organizations for the relief of those in need in this vicinity.

To help in breaking down racial and class prejudices by teaching English to our foreign population, and particularly to the foreign women, has been one of the concerns of the Committee. The foreign-speaking mother often loses the respect of her husband and children, who have picked up English at school or at work, and who consider her both out-of-date and ignorant. Three or four classes have already been started in as many different communities near Philadelphia, and it is hoped that more Friends will volunteer for this service. A simple beginner's text-book, an hour or two a week, and a friendly spirit are all the equipment needed. As the class is usually held in a private house, a natural reason for entering the homes of our foreign neighbors is thus offered. In this way those of us who cannot cross the seas to serve in a foreign country, may, if we will, broaden our range of experience and carry our message of good-will and internationalism.

Under the care of the Committee, about eight young women took advantage of an opportunity given by the Pennsylvania School for Social Service for an eight-weeks' course of training in the principles and practice of friendly visiting. By special arrangement, our girls were trained for work in the homes of alien enemies and conscientious objectors, where it was felt that such a group of Friends would be particularly qualified for service.

(To be concluded.)

FAITH is both subjective and objective; an operation of the mind impelling to action upon the subject which the mind has grasped and in which it has confidence and a doctrine or religious principle in which we believe. Overcoming victorious faith is subjective, and springs from confidence and trust in God.

LOVE ENDURES.

Written of the Jordans' Sundial, by a Prisoner for Conscience' Sake, 1917.

In the fury of the gale,
'Neath the lash of stinging hail,
When the morning stars grow pale:
'Love endures.'

Through the sunshine and the showers,
Still the sundial mid the flowers
Gives its message to the hours:
'Love endures.'

'Wars may rage and shatter peace,
Dangers threaten, foes increase;
Yet the wrath of man must cease!
'Love endures.'

'Locked behind a prison gate,
Friends may dwell far separate;
But the loyal heart can wait:
'Love endures.'

'Faith and trust are oft betrayed,
Hope's young blossoms droop and fade;
Love alone is ne'er dismayed:
'Love endures.'

Though the garden lie untended,
Still that motto runs unended:
'Love from Heaven hath descended,
And endures.'

CHILDREN'S CORNER.

THE GETA.

SAPPORO, Second Month 28, 1918.

Dear Friends:—Two days ago I started out in the rain. It was the first rain which has fallen here since New Year, but there have been many snow-falls. As I walked along in the dirt and slop in the middle of the street (there are no sidewalks) some two feet of packed snow and ice lay between my feet and the ground, and in many places the snow shoveled off the roofs lies in piles many feet high.

Presently I saw in the street a miniature house, about four feet long by two and a-half wide. The top of the peaked roof was not more than four feet high. A second look showed that the house rested on runners. As I came near, sounds of vigorous hammering came from inside. The occupant was not pounding to get out, for the door was open. Inside, sitting on his feet, Japanese fashion, was the repairer of "geta" (g hard, e like a in late).

"Geta" are wooden clogs. (Also the "geta" is a wooden clog. Japanese words in general have no distinction of singular and plural). The upper surface is either of plain wood or covered with fine matting. There are two straps, one attached near the middle of each side, which meet and join and pass between the great toe and its neighbor to a third point of attachment, thus providing a very flexible connection with the foot of the wearer. In warm weather a large proportion of people, of all ages and both sexes, go about upon their geta with feet otherwise bare. Even when it is quite cold, one may see an occasional pair of bare feet in the street. Most wearers of "geta" will now have on socks with a separate compartment for the great toe. These are called "tabi." (The a is like that in father and the i as in lin, but not so short).

The mode of attachment of the "geta" enables the wearer to slip them off with great ease, and go into the house in bare feet or in his "tabi," or to slip on a pair of sandals. The school-boy that slipped on the ice and fell this morning just as I passed him, dropped his straw sandals, which he was carrying along to wear in school. At the door of the dentist's office, where I was waiting when I began this letter, perhaps ten pairs of "geta" sat on the ground awaiting the return of their owners. A caller slips off his "geta" at the door, and presently the maid turns them around so that he may slip them on without stooping when he leaves. The "geta" is a cleanly thing, from the housekeeper's point of view, and when one has to walk in the middle of the street in all weathers, he is likely to envy the folks who walk above the mud, and who, when they come into the house, leave all that they have gathered outside.

The supports of the "geta," I should say, are of varying heights to suit different conditions. Fair weather "geta" may have props only an inch high, or even less; two of them; one just back of the ball of the foot, the other three inches further back. These extend the width of the clog. In the case of the low ones the whole is cut from one block, but the high ones, which are worn when the streets are wet or muddy, have separate pieces about half an inch thick, fitted tightly in slots in the block which forms the main portion. These thin bits of board present the end of the grain toward the ground. When the streets are icy they will have steel points to prevent slipping. Such high "geta" (they are often five inches high) provide the occupation of the man in the little house. The thin boards wear out or split, and he puts in new ones. He does not need so many tools as a shoemaker, so he can pull his repair shop about on wheels in summer and on runners in winter, and sit inside to work when he finds a customer.

"Geta" would be poorly suited to the needs of the men who pull the small vehicles called "jinrikisha" or "kuruma." They trot at about five miles an hour under favorable conditions, and this would be scarcely possible in clogs. They wear "tabi" with corrugated rubber soles. The carters wear straw sandals tied on with straw rope. When a sandal wears out, it is simply dropped in the street. Many men wear shoes of familiar types, but a favorite style is that with sides made of elastic cloth, because it is so easy to slip off. In snowy weather, many Japanese women wear, instead of "geta" in the street, rubber shoes with wool socks inside.—LOYD BALDERSTON.

"AN-CHA-ALLAH."—If ever you visit the beautiful city of Algiers on the northern coast of Africa, you will be sure to see some dark-skinned Arabs dressed in long flowing robes that once were white. They have adopted the Mohammedan faith and some of them speak French very well and a little English. Maybe one of them will tell you the fable which is said to explain why the lion which roams about the Sahara Desert does not carry his prey between his teeth as a cat carries a mouse, but drags it along the ground.

One day, the story goes, the king of beasts said, "An-cha-Allah" which means "if God is willing"; "To-morrow night I will kill a buffalo and carry it home for my little cubs to eat." His night's hunting was successful and the baby lions had a wonderful feast. Then he said, "An-cha-Allah, to-morrow night I will kill a horse and carry it home to them!" Again he was successful, and said, "An-cha-Allah, to-morrow night I will kill a calf, and carry it home." And God was willing for him to do that, too, and as he carried the calf to his den he swelled with pride and said, "To-morrow night I will kill a sheep." But thinking of his own greatness and strength, he forgot to say, "An-cha-Allah"—"if God is willing." That night he killed the sheep, but God humbled his pride. The king of beasts suddenly found he was unable to carry the sheep between his teeth and had to drag it on the ground all the way back to his den. This was the shame he had to suffer for his pride.

Even the old Romans, who were not Christians at all, used to be humble enough to put God's will before their own. When speaking of something they intended to do, they used to say, "Deus volente" meaning "God willing"—a Latin phrase which we sometimes see in writing even to-day. I suppose very few people in these days, except Mohammedans, stop to say, "If God is willing," and perhaps they do not always think of what it means as they say it. If we do not actually say it, may be it would help us to think it!—FRANCIS R. BACON.

"A LIVING SILENCE,"*

WILBUR W. CAMP.

With only ten months' experience in Silent Meetings, I feel in a peculiar way how little I know about a Living Silence. To my own limited knowledge I have added other ideas gleaned from our Fellowship discussions, and from articles written upon this subject.

For many Friends, Silent Meetings are ideal. They represent the highest type of worship, in which we show by our very attendance our faith in God. We come believing that God will make His presence felt, that He will fulfill the promise given us when He said, "Where two or three are gathered together in My name, there am I in the midst of them." We believe that this free intercourse between the spirit of man and God was not limited to the prophets of Israel, but has been felt through the ages to the present time. Paul and Silas were told by the Holy Spirit, not to go to Ephesus, and again forbidden to enter Bithynia. That same spirit guides the missionary to-day and will guide each individual, if he comes self-empty and ready to do His will. Many of us have seen His spirit at work in our meetings and know that in so far as we surrender our wills to Him, He will reveal himself in wonderful ways.

Silence for Friends is not only ideal, but very essential. It gives us the right atmosphere of our spiritual lives, in which we can come nearest to Christ. It becomes the mediator and the individual has direct communion with his Heavenly Father without the help of minister or priest. This silence offers the only place where we can seriously dwell in the consciousness of His Divine presence and be taught by it to see the desires that God may have for us.

While the Quaker silence is ideal and is essential to true worship, its possible good is lost unless that silence is kept alive. There must be felt in it the presence of the Divine Spirit. From it must be obtained a sense of peace, of satisfaction; a sense of being fed spiritually and one's condition spoken to.

A Living Silence almost always results in the combination of Silence and speech. The former alone would tend toward hardening the conscience of man to the dependence of his spiritual being upon God. Thus a time capable of developing much good may degenerate and become a form of worship so dead as to kill its spiritual possibilities. While silence necessarily precedes speech, the very fact that it is alive will lead us to understand the needs of the meeting and give vocally something for the help of the individuals who make it up. A Living Silence often gives to the most inexperienced person the words that speak to the condition of the meeting. I cannot conceive of any live meeting for worship being habitually a silent one.

The question has often come up in our Fellowship meetings and doubtless has been in the mind of each one here some time in the past, whether or not our Silent Meetings are really alive.

It would be impossible for anyone individual to answer for the entire meeting. There are times when our silence does seem dead to me, and I sometimes justify my judgment when some one comes in late and I see persons here and there look up or turn around to see who it is. I wonder whether the meeting really seems alive to them, or question whether they are contributing their share toward the spiritual growth of the body.

At other times, even while conscious of not getting the spiritual strength that I ought to get, I come to the conclusion that the meeting isn't dead at all. That it seems so to me, is very often my fault and not the meeting's.

Thus, I feel that the life of the meeting largely depends upon the faithfulness and life of each person present. For any one person to be in the wrong attitude makes the meeting dead for him. What, then, can we as individuals do to make and keep a Living Silence?

*This and the two following papers were read at a Conference held at Media, Pa., Third Month 17th. We hope in the next number to print an allied paper by Alfred Lowry, Jr.

In one of our Fellowship meetings there were four suggestions made that might help in preparing us to give what we ought to give toward a Living Silence. They were physical, social, mental and spiritual preparations.

To prepare one's self physically for meeting ought to be just as diligently practiced as physical preparation for some feat of strength. One would never think of entering an athletic contest with a body over-taxed by hard work and insufficient sleep. For such an occasion the body must be in the best of condition, in order to put into the contest the best efforts of the athlete. So should it be with our spiritual contest, for are not our meetings for worship very often a place of trial, of self-analysis, of struggle, that calls for our very best efforts?

In the Sermon on the Mount we find a help for our social preparation. "Therefore, if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hasught against thee, leave there thy gift before the altar and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift." For anyone to cherish anything but good-will and love toward his fellow-men, is to raise a stone wall between himself and his God, an impenetrable barrier through which communion with the Heavenly Father is impossible.

The kind of mental preparation that we should seek for is that kind which allows God the freest use of us. For one to be determined to speak or not to speak in meeting is to deny the immediate guidance of a Heavenly Father. How we can best give ourselves wholly to God will differ with the individual. Some people find it a help to read the Scriptures before meeting, while others fear that some text may hide or blot out some truth that God would have them meditate upon. Whatever be the mental preparation, the attitude must be one of absolute surrender of self to the will of God.

The spiritual preparation for a Living Silence depends upon our everyday lives. Why is it that our silence seems empty at times? Is it not because we so often have two planes on which we live? One, a plane for the other six days of the week, where we wiffully go our own way and let ourselves be mastered by some petty sin or bad temper. The other a plane for First-day, where we want to feel the directing hand of God. Now, when we blindly follow our own desires six days in the week, does it sound reasonable that God will lead us on the seventh? Is not this, then, one reason why our silence does not give us the satisfaction we desire?

Since a Living Silence depends upon the individual, let us each one be concerned about his own personal preparation, that our silence may make a great gain in promptness and power of worship. Let us see that our waiting upon God be not a vacant one, but "an intense activity of soul," that will bring us so near to our Master, that we may readily be able to discern His voice.

THE RESULTING MINISTRY.

WM. C. JAMES.

Realizing my own unworthiness as well as lack of experience and ability, I hesitate to write on this sacred subject. However, is not the overcoming of this hesitation or unwillingness to give ourselves more to such things partly the purpose of this conference? It is so easy to slide out of duties that we are not actually compelled to do. In many cases, is it not pure selfishness or a self-centred attitude? Taking up the subject, "The Resulting Ministry," we take for granted there should be a resulting ministry or this subject would not have been assigned. Alfred Lowry has well stated it, "There must be time not for the thinking out of the sermon so much as for the meeting to be melted down together into a unified tenderness of spirit so that there may be given a Divine response that speaks to the common need."

Another has said, "We must first discover our great need for spiritual fellowship which the living, vital meeting can give. Then we must enter into it and make ourselves a part."

This is sometimes rather difficult. One of the first things we may have to overcome is fear, often caused by nervous weakness. The hardest thing for many of us is to have true submission of will and forget self-interests. In other words, we must submit our own will to the will of God before He can reveal Himself to us or to others through us.

Is not self-consciousness a great trouble with many of us? And is there not something wrong with us if we are afraid of being forced to say something?

Let us forget self. It is not, "who speaks?" but "did we have a good meeting?" The thing is to be willing. This does not necessarily mean we will be called upon to say something, but willingness is an essential factor. Another essential is to have the courage of our conviction when the message comes.

This resulting message will or should come out of the silence, rather than break into it.

The message may seem to be a very simple truth, but someone likely needs it at just that time. The simplest truths stated to children are often those which many of us who are older have not yet gotten fully.

The resulting message may also tend toward a teaching ministry at times. This may not seem so inspired and yet be in place and satisfy a real need.

The individual needs in a meeting are often so different that one sermon or type of sermon cannot meet them all.

Our Quaker principles teach us that the ministry is the determining factor in the character of our worship. And that worship and Ministry go hand in hand to honor God. They also tell us that waiting upon God is not a vacant, listless waiting, but is "an intense activity of the soul," "a true exercise of the spirit." It is not so much waiting for the Lord to come to us, but waiting in His presence, intently watching for His directing Hand and call. For best results we should come to meeting with our minds prepared and in a receptive mood. Where individual needs were known before the meeting, it has proved to be an advantage in some cases.

The ministry should tend to build up the church, and strengthen it to meet the needs of the community.

Some may say that individual communion is the highest type, but can it be the highest type until it goes to others? It is said "when we meet together we do mutually lift each other up."

It is natural that some meetings should be better than others, but I believe many should be better than they are. I remember hearing a noted speaker say "that a quiet gentlemanly Christian life wins souls to Christ as much as anything else."

My first thought was to interpret it narrowly and think that, if I kept myself straight that was enough. Later I found that to do this right I must realize the needs of others and have them help me realize mine. Thus we realize again one of the values of our ideal meeting for worship and what it should be. It has been stated, and I believe truthfully so, that the present day does not seem to be producing great spiritual characters in our meetings, that is the kind of person that can overcome the spiritual deadness of a meeting and unite it into a spiritual life.

This fact shows us that we must concern ourselves if we want to be a part of this ideal meeting. It has been said, "that the heart of Quakerism is the meeting for worship." Therefore, does not the future of Quakerism depend largely on our consecration to it.

Last of all, let us remember that we must combine our efforts and stand united in order to carry out the desire that is on our hearts.

"To gain his message the preacher must lose himself in God." To give it carrying power he must lose himself in men.—GEORGE WHARTON PEPPER.

THE MINISTRY.

EDITH STRATTON.

NOTE.—A symposium of group discussions prepared by Edith Stratton and read at a conference of Young Friends held at Media, Third Month 17, 1918.

The summary with which I have been entrusted, of the thoughts of the three groups of young Friends in this Quarterly Meeting, is based upon seventeen written answers from representatives of all three groups and from attendance at four meetings of the Media and West Chester groups. The Lansdowne and West Chester young Friends confine their answers according to suggestion to the one topic—"The Best Preaching I Have Ever Heard." The summary of the other four topics on the Quarterly Meeting outline represents, therefore, only the Media Fellowship. We shall take up these topics in order:

On the subject of the "spiritual needs of the community about us" two thoughts are brought out by the papers.

1. "The Physical Needs of the Community must be satisfied before there can be any very vital spiritual improvement." This is the call of a religion that functions socially.

2. The lives of those who would minister to the physical needs of the community should be charged with the personality of Jesus Christ. This is the call of social service based on personal religion.

The topic of "Individual Meditation" was peculiarly interesting. It would appear from the group discussions that religious reality begins rather characteristically with individual meditation, preferably alone and out of doors. The thought was new to some that only an adolescent or selfish religion could stop indefinitely at this point of religious reality. Group worship is a greater thing; it is in fact greater than the sum of the worshipping individuals because a new spiritual element enters with the three-cornered communion of God and thee and me. It is perhaps an unconscious admission of this fact that makes the term group meditation unfamiliar. Meditation should become a more aggressive, active, sharing experience which we call worship and which normally focalizes itself in ministry, and in the act is intensified and focused.

The subjects of living silence and the ministry which as someone has said "breaks not into this silence but out of it," have been so well presented by the two previous papers that I shall not touch upon them except to express one thought which seemed to strike home to the Media group. This was that we "lay" members have a large responsibility not merely in giving a message sometimes, but in creating an atmosphere in which a spiritual message can grow and be delivered and driven home. The one giving the message often has a tremendous load to lift when he tries to raise the spiritual level of a meeting, and the fact that God often performs this miracle through one consecrated messenger should not blind us to the fact that we, by our lethargy, are stiling other messages from less experienced or more timid persons and are weakening the spiritual results which God intended.

Under the subject of "immediate guidance," Elbert Russell pointed out that the original understanding of this term by the early Quakers was that guidance is first-hand to each individual without a mediator. It has since that rather exclusively emphasized immediacy in point of time.

One of the high water marks of the series of discussions in Media was the meeting led by Alfred C. Garrett on "A Call to the Ministry" and "Baptism and Power." It is very difficult to report on this topic, as most of the answers are evasive and quite non-committal. This is entirely natural, I suppose, for to those who have sometimes been called to give a message, even a very humble little message, the subject deals with the Holy of Holies of life, where one has felt for a rapturous moment or so the very heart-beat of God. The silence of those who habitually never speak on a priori grounds we shall not attempt to explain. One who knows the call writes the following, "A call to the ministry must come from our Lord, Sometimes there is an overpowering necessity laid upon one, with a feeling of 'woe' if disobedient. Sometimes the call is very gentle and the test of its 'rightness' comes through an honest endeavor to speak the message we feel. It seems to me that we should want to be the willing child, anxious to be of service and ready to be called, rather than waiting to be driven by the fear of a terrible 'woe.'"

The next topic is the one considered specifically by all the groups, "The Best Preaching I Have Ever Heard." At one end of the interesting collection is the person who feels he has gained more real inspiration from "Les Miserables," given in moving pictures, and those (and does this not include us all?) to whom the seven-days-a-week Life preaches the best sermon? As one says, "The most vital message of Christianity is life itself; the two ought to be synonymous." The following quotations deal with the specific vocal ministry of the meeting for worship. Here, too, there is certainly enough range of appreciation to call out diverse gifts. There are the ones reached primarily through the intellect. Here is a delightfully frank answer: "I am in the stage where I get more from a teaching ministry, even if not so spiritual or inspired. However, I think the man who has what I call a consecrated intellect is my ideal and appeals to me, and most other people most, for he combines wide knowledge and experience with inspiration. Another thing is that the language be that of every-day use, not terms that may sound just like Friendly sermons, but when you stop to think, you really don't know the meaning of. Also that the sermon have some practical bearing on life."

Another person has gotten most from a sermon that was most likely thought out and developed beforehand, but which he felt was true "prophetic ministry." Three mention the force of practical applications and illustrations that are clear and to the point and of a unified sermon that is logical with topics and sub-topics. But one of these same persons adds: "On the other hand, sometimes a few broken words preach the best sermon." The desire is expressed in different words in numerous papers that the message should be as brief as possible for the full message, that it should be a "practical message which can be applied to every-day living," and that it be genuinely "inspired." As one person describes it "so spiritual in character that it is without doubt a direct Divine message." The element of joy and optimism is mentioned as prerequisites by two people.

One young Friend who has come from the pastoral meetings of the West said that to him the argument for the Eastern idea of a direct call to speak a message was that the "prepared" sermon was not the immediate spiritual reaction to the situation in a given meeting. He had been quite convinced that the latter type "spoke to the condition" of more people, assuming of course that the messenger was a person spiritually sensitive to the needs and the struggles of those about him.

The life of the one giving the message must ring true, else his message seems mere lip service. If there is one respectable sin that young people loathe above others, it is that of hypocrisy and it is fear of this and consciousness of inability to incarnate the message that burns within, that suppresses many a genuine call to speak without doubt.

One person says the most helpful preaching "has been when I have been able to feel that the speaker was opening up to me the spiritual working of his own life." Two answers speak of the ministry of young Friends as follows: "The most helpful preaching I have heard has been given by younger Friends of our meeting. Those who are facing the same problems and temptations we are continually facing seem to preach to our condition."

The other person gives another reason for the same impression: "Of preaching I have found that most helpful which has been the expression of younger Friends. It is often not easy for a young Friend to express himself; consequently the Power that prompts him seems a larger, more intimate thing when it overcomes his resistance." But the writer adds, after further thought: "I'm not at all sure that is true, for a long line of older Friends headed by _____ and _____, and _____ and _____ seems to rise up before me a little reproachfully."

After all age is not the determining factor in prophetic ministry, nor even matter or manner of presentation (important as these are), but the reality of the message, as suggested in this answer:

"The best preaching I have ever heard is that which comes from the fullest soul, when the minister is most in earnest, himself afire with his message, then I think he best reaches his hearers. I have heard a few broken words which have filled my eyes with tears and touched me more deeply than all the eloquence of the apparently more gifted speakers. Again I have heard powerful sermons from experienced ministers which have seemed to make every soul tender and prayerful."

This type of spiritual experience that changes the centre of the emotional life seems to be stimulated and to express itself most characteristically in prayer. One person says, "The best preaching I have ever heard has always been prayer. To paraphrase, 'There's prayer and then all around prayer there's a space, and then there are various grades of preaching.'"

Another speaks of the wonderful prayers of a Westtown teacher who "seemed to know my needs at that time when most everyone passes through a period of doubt." Another person says that only a real spiritual experience can express itself in prayer and that many who speak fluently on the subject of religion fail utterly here. Only three of the papers describe a particular sermon. In these three cases the message gripped because it reached a staggering need or interpreted a present experience.

In all the discussions runs a common note—a thirst for reality,—for ministers that "understand" from personal experience or from Divine sympathy the struggle and the doubt and the problems and the sudden ecstasies that are life; for ministers that are afire with God, who come with the message as from the presence of the Most High to speak of things that their eyes have seen and their hands handled of the Word of life; for ministers who are in vital touch with God and with men.

JOHN W. NICHOLSON, JR., during the past Winter, has been serving as a Y. M. C. A. Secretary at Camp Dix. His strong sense of duty impelled him to work beyond his strength, and after a prolonged illness, he passed away on the 10th instant. The poem below (evidently of his own composition) was found among his papers and was obtained from the family by one of the contributors of THE FRIEND, who felt that it should be shared with others.

Father, when the way is dreary,
And we cannot understand
Why we meet with disappointment
Guided by Thy loving hand,
Comfort us with Thine assurance,
Breathe a blessing from above
That we may rejoice in sorrow
Knowing it Thy Will, Thy Love.

Love forgiving, love enduring,
Boundless as eternity,
Far beyond the mortal vision
Is His love for you and me.

Cease, Oh man, thy care and sorrow,
Place thy trust on Him above,
He who knows thine every weakness
Will sustain thee in His love.
Such a love and tender mercy,
Mortal man cannot conceive,
It is ever brooding, watching,
O'er the faithful, who believe.

May the Faith to us be given
To rejoice what e'er befall,
Giving thanks for joys, for sorrows,
Since His love embraces all.
For it is our solace ever,
When the light of Hope grows dim,
As a beacon brightly shining,
Ever leading us to Him.

When the sun of life is setting,
May we leave the darkening shadow,
Firm in hope as we are wafted
Onward, outward evermore,
On the ocean of Thy mercy,
Till a light gleams from afar,
And our eyes behold Thy glory
Bright against the evening star.

NEWS ITEMS.

THE "C. O." SITUATION.—Since the events briefly alluded to in last week's issue, the situation at Camp Dix has developed to a considerable extent.

As a result of the visit on Seventh-day (6th inst.) the C. O.'s were released from the Guard House on the 10th inst., after an imprisonment of four-and-a-half days. The men are now back in the library, performing the same class of work which they have been doing for some months.

On the afternoon of the 10th inst., word was received in Philadelphia that as a test case, court martial proceedings were to be instituted against one of the C. O.'s; later in the afternoon, we were informed that one of our own members was the individual chosen, and that the case was to be tried next morning at 8:30 o'clock. The War Department at Washington was advised by telephone of the proposed action.

The Camp authorities kindly agreed to defer the trial until 10:30 A. M. A sympathetic attorney was one of the party of two visitors who turned up at Camp to face the issue; they were most courteously received at headquarters, and informed at the office of the Judge Advocate that a telegram had been received from Washington ordering a suspension of the case, and that particulars should be sent to the War Department.

The decision to be rendered in this case will probably have an important bearing on all the C. O.'s in camps throughout the country, and we did not object to the course taken.

The charges preferred against the young man by his captain were:—

- 1st.—Refusing to do "Police" duty.
- 2nd.—Refusing to be measured for uniform.
- 3rd.—Refusing to wear the military uniform.
- 4th.—Refusing to sweep "upstairs."

The objection to performing more than a limited amount of service under the first and fourth charges, is that one or more other men are left free to train as soldiers.

We are not in a position at this time to speak freely regarding pending negotiations with the War Department, which, it is hoped, will give relief to the real C. O.

W. B. H.

THE John C. Winston Company of Philadelphia has just issued "The Story of a Small College," by Isaac Sharpless, President Emeritus of Haverford College. It is an account of the founding and history of Haverford, and discusses the place of a small college and its value in the midst of university competition. Later we expect to give fuller notice of the book.

THIRTY or more American colleges, including Earlham, Richmond Indiana, offered to co-operate in bringing to this country, for the academic year 1918-19, one hundred French girls, for attendance, on scholarship, in American colleges. Each college is to take two girls, furnishing them free rooms, board, tuition, and all student fees; the French authorities are to provide for traveling expenses, clothing and incidentals. The girls are to be ready for college work and able to speak English. The Association of American Colleges will assist in their selection and will supervise their assignment to various colleges after they reach the United States.

The two following items are taken from the last number of The Friend (London) received at our office:

Theodora Wilson Wilson has been informed by the police that they have "pulped" 18,000 copies of the cheap edition of her book, "The Last Weapon," a book which has been on the market for two years. Some other seized publications have also been destroyed, to a total value of at least £150. This does not, however, mean that the above named book is out of print.

NUMBER OF MEN ARRESTED.—The number of men arrested and handed over to the military authorities up to the 15th ult. was 5,291, of whom 4,735 have been court-martialed. Of the latter, 3,545 have been court-martialed once, 601 twice, 484 three times, 102 four times and 3 five times. The number of men rejected or discharged on medical grounds is 310, and at liberty for other reasons 116. The number who have died since arrest is 18. Three thousand and twenty-eight have accepted work under the Home Office Scheme.

An English correspondent sends us the following:—

Arthur Lean landed at Boston on the 15th ult., after three years and five months in the Ruhleben Camp. Twice had his name been posted for repatriation, and twice was he "turned down;" the first occasion was two years ago. The day before the camp was left, a German doctor expressed to him his appreciation of the work done by members of the Society of Friends for German subjects in England, and his wish that Friends could know how highly this friendliness was esteemed by some Germans. On the 7th, at 5 A. M., Arthur Lean passed outside the barbed wire, and a long railway journey, with no refreshment other than a little acorn coffee, brought him and 120 others to Rotterdam. Every consideration and kindness were received there from Dutch nurses and attendants, though the returning men remained under a military guard during four days, until they passed on to three Red Cross boats, which carried them off Cromer and then to Boston. His friends will be glad to know that Arthur Lean is in good health and excellent spirits, and that he has been able in Cornwall to rejoin his wife and four children, who were helped by Dr. Henrietta Thomas to leave Berlin two years ago.

REPORT OF THE TREASURER OF THE AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE, FOR WEEK OF FOURTH MONTH 13, 1918.

Received from 22 Meetings	$10,044.27
Received from 13 Individuals	288.00
Received for Armenian and Syrian Relief	91.30
Received for Supplies	74.00
	$10,497.57

CHARLES F. JENKINS,
Treasurer.

A QUESTION FOR YOUNG FRIENDS.—If an army officer should say to you, "Would you accept an order from the government to work in a ship yard constructing ships?" what would your answer be?

A captain at division headquarters, Camp Lee, Virginia, did ask me that question. We all like to answer questions put to us at once and I started to do so. But as I began to reply, I realized these facts: 1. The question was a hypothetical one and might hinge on undetermined points and therefore could only be answered hypothetically. 2. There was another attempt to divert me to the unprofitable and impossible splitting of hairs on where to draw the line.

This was my answer: If I knew all the facts involved in such an order as that suggested I would, after careful consideration, be able to give my answer and only then. But it is not a question with me as to how near I can come to doing something that I know is wrong without actually doing it. What I am interested in is doing the thing which will stand out strong and clear as an expression of the principles of love and co-operation which I understand Christ lived before us. The Friends' Relief and Reconstruction Work offers what seems to me the greatest opportunity for doing this at the present time. That is why I am in it and there is where I hope to stay while the need requires. P. J. F., in The American Friend.

As we go to press there is nothing further to report from Charles Evans except a brief message that the Paris office is "feverishly busy" and a letter will follow shortly.—Eds.

NOTICES.

SOCIAL ORDER COMMITTEE OF PHILADELPHIA YEARLY MEETING OF FRIENDS—CONFERENCE, Fourth Month 25, 1918, Fourth and Arch Streets, Philadelphia.

Round Table Groups (of special interest to women)—3.30 to 5.30 P. M.
Evening Meeting (for all of our members)—7.45 P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

First Period 3.30 to 4.30:—

1. Problems of Household Expenditure—Committee Room, Arch Street Meeting-house.

Leaders: Hannah C. Pyle, Lydia B. Cadbury. Discussion of the household budget and its value. An itemized household budget blank sent out by the Committee has been filled in anonymously by a number of different families. A comparative study of these actual household expenditures will be presented for discussion.

2. Problems of Personal Expenditure—Room No. 1, Arch Street Centre.

Leader: Rebecca Carter. This group will take up the problems of women responsible only for their own maintenance. The young women are especially invited. A new form of convenient account book will be shown and its use explained.

Second Period, 4.30 to 5.30:—

3. The Relation Between Household Employer and Employee—Committee Room, Arch Street Meeting-house.

Leader: Sarah W. Elkinton. Discussion on looking at domestic problems from the other person's point of view.

4. The Problems of the Purchaser—Room No. 1, Arch Street Centre.

Leader: Mary C. Scattergood. Discussion of the purchaser's responsibility for conditions under which articles purchased have been made and also of the ethics of the modern store.

SUPPER—5.30 to 7.30.

For which a charge of 40 cents will be collected at the time.

EVENING MEETING—7.45 P. M.

Professor Harry F. Ward, Secretary of the Methodist Federation for Social Service, Boston, Mass. Subject: "The Human Side of Industry."

Professor Ward, who is Professor of Sociology in Boston University and lecturer of the Union Theological Seminary, is one of the ablest speakers on industrial problems in this country.

WESTTOWN SCHOOL.—Parents who are considering entering children at Westtown for next year are advised to make application as early as convenient. We shall be glad to have parents bring their children to visit the School at any time. Such a visit on a week-day afternoon would give an opportunity to see the School in operation (the afternoon session closes at 2.50), and also to get acquainted with the athletics and other out-door interests of our boys and girls.

GEORGE L. JONES, Principal.

MEETINGS FROM Fourth Month 21, to Fourth Month 27th:—

Frankford Monthly Meeting, Fourth-day, Fourth Month 24, at 7.45 P. M.

Philadelphia, Fourth and Arch Streets, Fifth-day, Fourth Month 25, at 10.30 A. M.

Germantown, Fifth-day, Fourth Month 25, at 10 A. M.

Lansdowne, Fifth-day, Fourth Month 25, at 7.45 P. M.

DIED.—On the tenth of Fourth Month, 1918, at Moorestown, N. J., JOHN W. NICHOLSON, JR., son of John W. and Eliza Stokes Nicholson; a member of Chester Monthly Meeting of Friends, N. J.

—, at Medford, N. J., on the fourteenth of Fourth Month, 1918, JANE E. EVES, widow of Samuel Eves, aged eighty-five years; a member of Upper Evesham Monthly Meeting, N. J.

—, at Norwich, Ont., Can., twenty-fifth of Second Month, 1918, CATHERINE HALL, in her eighty-first year; a member of Norwich Monthly Meeting.

—, at West Chester, Pa., Fourth Month 6th, SARAH H. GARRETT, wife of Robert Garrett, and daughter of the late John and Hannah S. Cope, in the eighty-fifth year of her age.

—, on Fourth Month 14, 1918, at Media, Pa., ANNA RHOADS, aged eighty-six years; a member of Chester Monthly Meeting of Friends, Pa. —, on the twenty-sixth of Second Month, 1918, at Flushing, Ohio, MARY C. HOLLOWAY, aged sixty-eight years; a member and elder of Flushing Monthly Meeting.

Is Your Life Insurance Adequate?

You will need more than $9000 to guarantee to your family a monthly income of fifty dollars for twenty years.

Write for information.

The Provident Life and Trust Co.

Of Philadelphia, Pa.

N. W. Cor. Fourth and Chestnut Sts.

H. F. BRUNER

S. D. HALL

H. F. BRUNER & Co.COAL

OFFICE AND YARD

16 N. TWENTY-FIRST STREET

PHILADELPHIA

TELEPHONES: LOCUST 241
RACP 561

A COMPLETE LINE

OF

NURSERY STOCK

FRUIT TREES,

ORNAMENTAL TREES,

SHRUBS,

SMALL FRUITS,

ROSES,

CLEMATIS,

HEDGE PLANTS.

The Rakestraw-Pyle Company

KENNETT SQUARE, PA.

GLASLYN-CHATHAM

PARK PLACE

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

A Family House of Established Reputation,
Open Throughout the Year.

NATHAN L. JONES.

ALBERT C. RIDLEY
1714 SANSON STREET

Engraving and Printing

FINE BUSINESS STATIONERY

Wedding Invitations, Calling Cards, Greeting
Cards. Die Stamped Writing Paper

TELEPHONE—LOCUST 1782

REMBLANCE: 254 S. 44th St. BELL 'PHONE: BAIRING 2084X

WILLIAM OAKES

Plumbing and Heating Contractor

ALSO LEAD WORKING

260 SOUTH TENTH STREET

PHILADELPHIA

BELL 'PHONE: Filbert 3666.

Pocono Manor Winter Inn
POCONO MANOR, PA.

SPRINGTIME in the Pocono Mountains is ever a delight to those who admire and study nature. The Birds and Flowers are numerous and varied, and the Trout Fishing in the Swiftwater is wonderful.

J. W. HURLEY, Manager
(Pocono Summit Station, D. L. & W. R. R.)

Woolman School

A Friends' School for Social and Religious Education.

Six Weeks Summer Term:
Seventh Month 1—Eighth Month 10, 1918.

For Information, Apply to
ELBERT RUSSELL, Director,
WOOLMAN SCHOOL
SWARTHMORE, PA.

W. B. WEAVER
UNDERTAKER and EMBALMER

550-552 N. 5TH ST., PHILA., PA.

Special Attention Given to Funerals
In and Out of the City. Also Chapel
Accommodations for Funerals.

BELL 'PHONE : ESTABLISHED 1880

To enjoy good health and a sound digestion use
PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT BREAD
made from the entire wheat grain ground on a stone mill. A perfect food and natural regulator. Sold by all good grocers in Philadelphia.

Write for particulars to

PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT CO.

10th & Susquehanna Aves., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

WALL PAPERS—All Grades

Custom of Friends Specially Selected

FRANK C. BUEHL

Successor to S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON
902 SPRING GARDEN ST. - PHILADELPHIA
Store open until 10.30 A. M. Any other time by appointment only
Opposite Spring Garden Station, Phila. & Reading R. R.
ESTABLISHED 1859. BELL 'PHONE

FRIENDS AND THE INDIANS
1655-1917.

By Rayner W. Keelsey.

Suitable for use by Study Classes.

FOR SALE AT $1.50

FRIENDS' BOOK STORE

304 Arch Street PHILADELPHIA, PA.

To ADVERTISERS.—THE FRIEND is now open for selected advertisements at the following rates: One inch, 50 cents, or 4 cents a line; no insertion for less than 25 cents. Long term rates given on application.

Friends having real estate to rent or sell, also those desiring board or rooms, should find THE FRIEND an excellent medium for reaching interested parties.

Standing business cards are also solicited.

IF you are satisfied with your present printer stay by him. He deserves your support. If you are considering a change see

THE HOLMES PRESS

J Linton Engle, Pres. 1336 Cherry Street, Phila.

JOSEPH G. FOGG

FUNERAL DIRECTOR and EMBALMER

S. W. Cor. Sixteenth and Race Streets

Special attention given to Friends' Funerals
Bell 'Phone : Spruce 1646

SHETLAND PONIES

Oldest Herd in United States

Established 1883

Specialty attractive prices just now owing to change in business arrangements

HARTZELL BROS., - SEBRING, OHIO
Importers and Breeders

WESTTOWN SCHOOL

On account of the operation of the draft, it is expected that there will be two openings in our teaching staff after this school year. One position is that of teacher of French, the other of Mathematics or possibly lower High School work. For at least one of the positions we desire a man who would have some duties in the dormitory life of the boys. The other position is open to either a man or a woman, and will include few outside duties.

There will also be two openings for secretarial work in the Principal's office, including work under the direction of the Registrar of the W. O. S. The position as School Secretary demands a woman with an interest in educational matters, possessing if possible a college education, preferably an Old Scholar, and with a working knowledge of shorthand and typewriting.

GEORGE L. JONES, Principal,
WESTTOWN, PA.

FOR RENT -- EIGHT-ROOM FURNISHED COTTAGE, bath, open plumbing, hot and cold water, lawn and spring water. Several meals daily, half hour ferry service to Newport and Nantuxant Pier. Excellent opportunity where there are one or more invalids in family. Meals must be taken at Maplewood.

Apply DR. W. LINCOLN BATES,

Jamestown, R. I.

FOR RENT FROM SIXTH MONTH 1 TO FIFTH MONTH 30, 1918, furnished home on Havercord College campus. Nine rooms, two baths, garage.

R. W. ELSIE, HAVERCORD, PA.

FRIENDS' SCHOOL AT ATLANTIC CITY, N. J. will need three experienced teachers for year 1918-19 for Seventh and Eighth grades, Fourth and Fifth grades, and Kindergarten. Apply to Principal,

HELEN L. FORSTHE.

WANTED—BY A COLLEGE WOMAN, who makes a specialty of private teaching, a position as tutor or companion, preferably in a family of Friends. Excellent reference given. Address R. Care of "THE FRIEND," 207 Walnut Street, Philadelphia.

WANTED—BY ONE OF EXPERIENCE A POSITION as companion nurse for invalid.
Address B. Box 308,
Haverford, Penna.

WANTED—BY ONE OF EXPERIENCE A POSITION as companion nurse for invalid, or managing housekeeper for elderly person or couple.
Address M., "THE FRIEND."

SCHOOL PRINCIPAL WANTED AT FRIENDS' S. Academy, a boarding and day school for boys and girls located at Locust Valley, Long Island, N. Y. A married man, who is a member of the Society of Friends, preferred. For particulars address FARRINGTON L. WILLY, President, Glen Cove, N. Y.

Belt Satisfaction

A MICHIGAN corporation is well pleased with the 38-inch 3-ply Rhoads Belt shown above. They also have a 20-inch double that has been pronounced by several men the straightest running belt they ever saw.

You can save stops and reduce your belt trouble by using Rhoads Tannate Lace Leather. Such stops cost more than the lace. Tannate outlasts rawhide from two to five times.

J. E. RHOADS & SONS

PHILADELPHIA: 12 N. THIRD ST.
NEW YORK: 102 BEEKMAN ST.
CHICAGO: 322 W. RANDOLPH ST.
BALTIMORE AGENCY: 37 S. CHARLES ST.
FACTORY AND TANNERY, WILMINGTON, DEL.

SEE WALKER & KEPLER

FOR

Good Electrical Work

531 CHESNUT ST. - PHILA.

Philadelphia's
Representative Store

ELKINS, MORRIS & CO.

BANKERS

REPRESENTATIVES

PAUL W. BROWN
JAMES P. MAGILL

LAND TITLE BUILDING
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

RAILROAD AND PUBLIC UTILITY BONDS

FOR

CONSERVATIVE INVESTMENT.

FULL PARTICULARS ON REQUEST.

We recommend the use of RAG FEATHERWEIGHT

(Antique Finish)

As the paper for high-grade Books and other Publications

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE MATERIAL THAT WE SELL

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY
MANUFACTURERS
PHILADELPHIA

ALFRED C. HAINES

Building Glass and Paints
56 N. Front St., Philadelphia.

R. C. Ballinger Ernest R. Yarnall John A. Stratton
TELEPHONES

Bell—Spruce 17-81 Keystone—Race 637

R. C. BALLINGER & CO.

CONTRACTORS AND BUILDERS

218 N. Thirteenth St. Philadelphia.

Letchworth Cottage Spring Lake Beach, N. J.

Open for the Season 1918

A. C. & S. H. Letchworth

Established 1870 Both Phones

Frank W. Taylor & Son

Roofers in Tin, Tile, Slate,
Copper and Slug,
Manufacturers of Ranges
and Furnaces

FURNACES, RANGES & HOT WATER SYSTEMS
installed and cared for by expert mechanics

259 S. FOURTH ST., PHILADELPHIA

Genealogist

Elizabeth B. Satterthwaite
68 N. Hookton St., Trenton, N. J.

Friends Arch St. Centre

304 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Provides comfortable accommodations for guests by the day or week. Meals at moderate prices.

AMELIA D. FEATHERSTONE, Matron.
PHONE—MARET 1871.

THE following timely books recommended by the Social Order Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, are for sale at Friends' Book Store, No. 304 Arch Street,
Philadelphia.

"The Track of the Storm." 111 pp.	.55
M. B. Crook,
"The Practice of Christianity,"	$2.00
"The Church and the Hour."
Vida D. Scudder,	1.00
"The Social Problem,"
C. A. Ellwood,	1.25
"The Abolition of Poverty,"
J. H. Hollander,	.75
"Christianizing the Social Order."
Walter Rauschenbusch,	1.50
"The Arm of God."	.75
"The Day of Our Visitation,"
William Littleboy,	.50
"A Word of Remembrance and Caution to the Rich."
John Woolman,	.05

WM. H. PILE'S SONS

BOOK AND JOB PRINTING

422 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO THE
PRINTING OF BOOKS AND CATALOGS

HARRY S. LEE

313 WALNUT STREET

PAINTER AND GRAINER

ANTIQUE and OFFICE FURNITURE RESTORED
JOBING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO ESTIMATES

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 91.

FIFTH-DAY, FOURTH MONTH 25, 1918.

No. 43.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price $2.00 a year in Advance.

Publisher, DAVIS H. FORSYTHE.

Editors { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
 { DAVIS H. FORSYTHE,
 { MARY WARD.

Make remittances payable to

THE FRIEND,

No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

AN UNFAIR QUESTION?

A letter has probably reached many Friends with the past fortnight asking this question—What would you do if they were already landed on our shores and the sanctity of members of your immediate family were about to be invaded; would you stand aside, and allow them to brutally abuse those who are dearer to you by far than life itself, or would you by an act of your own hand strive to deprive them once and for all of all power to offend in the future? Would you not feel justified in depriving them of life rather than that they should slay your loved ones?

This is no new question. It is not even an old one in a new form; it is the identical question put to the Christian fathers in the days when the Christian church was young, and if we take the trouble we can find what answer the Christian fathers returned to it.

We must recognize that every question pertaining to the moral and religious standards of mankind has a fringe of perplexities that, even to the sincere seeker after truth, often puzzles him not a little. Such a question is this that we have now in mind.

If we have clear-cut convictions that an act or an opinion will not tally with the declarations and commands of Truth itself, should it not be sufficient, as far as we are concerned ourselves, that we abide in patience for a fuller and clearer light, rather than contradict that which has already been vouchsafed to us?

The battles of life that are fought out by us as individuals, the questions of right and wrong to thee and to me, are more than half won when we have a clear assurance within ourselves that we are faced in the right direction. It may be, it probably will be, a severe trial of our faith in these very cases that we cannot see the end of the road we have commenced to follow; for though "narrow is the gate, and straitened the way" we are enjoined to walk in, we know from life's rich experiences that we see oftentimes but a little way ahead; nothing is lost, but indeed much is gained if we press on till the morning sunshine has scattered the mist, provided, of course, that we always face the right way.

I doubt if a satisfactory answer can be given to the query propounded by the honest questioner alluded to in the opening paragraph of this paper, unless it be the positive negation of the principle which we want to establish, and we say, "Yes—under the circumstances, admitting the terribleness of the offense threatened, and the manifest gain by ridding the world of a malefactor of such depravity, a man is justified in taking the life of another."

Few who read this paper can accept such doctrine as this, but with most men it will find favor; it is the only way the majority of honest, thoughtful men can answer the question that has been propounded. In answering it thus they can be true to their convictions and to the apparent teachings of their Church, but it is not the answer the Friend must give, he has a more difficult task, because he seems to lift the problem out of the region of practical, everyday life into another world which to most men is little other than visionary and unattainable.

All real Christians are working for the advance of God's kingdom on the earth; because they work by different methods should never blind our eyes to this fact. Maybe our mission as a separate Society is smaller than some of us at times want to suppose. It may be that there is something of Divine purpose in having entrusted a few peculiar truths in a peculiar way to a little band of Christians (almost the least of all). Others are doubtless doing more valuable service in fields we have neglected, and are reaching people in lands where we have never so much as entered in. Just now it is clearly given to us to bear a corporate testimony to the sinfulness of war. Others recognize, even more clearly than we do, its awfulness and the bestial and devilish elements that enter into war, but it would seem to be the high privilege of a very few to testify to the full measure of its unrighteousness.

Can there be any greater woe pronounced upon a people than upon those who draw nigh unto God with their lips, but who deny Him by the actions of their lives?

The testimony-bearers to-day are hardly those who in the comparative quiet of their home neighborhoods or in the assemblies of the people plead for peace, good and right as this may be if wisely directed, they are rather a little band of young men, who have made the venture of their faith, to stand for what they claim to be clear duty, with all respect for authority and for the opinions of others that their consciences will permit, but to make no sacrifice of their allegiance to God when His commands conflict with what they hold to be secondary to His decrees, and with this company is that other band of equally devoted men, who are demonstrating as has never been done in just the same way in the world's history, that a negation implies but little effort, and to prove your position to a man who sees the whole question from a very different angle than the one you employ, you must show him in your life that you will sacrifice all and more if need be than the man who works in the trenches.

There is no claim made by these men, they would be the last to even think there was anything heroic in their lives; they will know far more defeats than victories, but there will come some day the realization that, under God, they have had a little part in achieving a great and final victory, which will more than compensate for all the sacrifices they have sustained.

366 CYRUS COOPER
1918

D. H. F.

From a personal note of J. E. we quote:—

"The enclosed appeal by my dear friend, Wm. Blair Neatby, impressed me as so fitting to our late 're-affirmation' that I wondered if thou might not find room for it in THE FRIEND. Although it was written nearly three years ago it seems to me just as appropriate to Friends of our Yearly Meeting now as it was for English Friends then.

"The close of our Yearly Meeting was remarkably sweet and tender and helpful. Indeed, all of the sessions made it about the best that I can recall in forty-eight years, as I began to attend it in 1870." [Eos.]

AN APPEAL TO FRIENDS.

Several weeks have passed since Yearly Meeting, and we have had time more nearly to realize the extreme moment of some of the resolutions at which we arrived. A great "testimony," in which our spiritual forefathers had dared to put themselves at issue with almost the whole body of Christian profession, had been subjected to a test as terrible, it may be, as any human belief has been called to endure. With all solemnity and deliberation we recorded our conviction that our traditional testimony abode that test and could therefore abide every test; it bound us absolutely: we may not fight.

In this position, we of to-day have more individual support elsewhere than our forefathers found, but in point of corporate support we stand where they stood; indeed, the Christian Churches in their corporate capacity are firmer upholders of what they term defensive war than for long past. In accepting this solitude we have accepted a solitary corporate responsibility. Many other Christians are with us; not a few with gifts of leadership to which we would gladly defer; but no other historic Christian Society can go forth into the world, and say to men everywhere, "We bring you Peace; you know that we have never brought you war."

If the Friends who first "published Truth" in the days of the Commonwealth and the Restoration had been called to confront the appalling crisis of to-day, can we believe that they would have failed to fill Europe with the message? We are not they; but God has chosen us in our weakness, and we must do what they would have done, "God our aid." It will not avail us to have re-affirmed a great faith if we refuse the responsibility that the faith imposes.

We must on no account think to discharge this responsibility by simply doing our share after the war towards the establishment of a universal system of international arbitration. For if we helped to establish such a system on the basis of an armed international force, we should stultify absolutely the position we have so solemnly assumed; while on the other hand, in the absence of a basis of force, the system would be a hopeless expedient, unless we could at the same time subdue in men's hearts the lusts and fears from which wars arise. That subdual is the deep spiritual foundation that must be laid for the Peace of the world; and unless the history of our Society has been written for us in vain, it is the only foundation in which Friends could ever be tempted to put trust.

And how is it to be done? In one form or another, by the ministry of the Word of Christ. Christians have not believed enough in the ministry of the Word. I hope we are on the eve of a new experience of its power.

Doubtless the hour is not yet (except, to a certain extent, in our own and some neutral lands). Just now, we are largely called to bear the yoke of Christ in meekness and patience, and to seek under that discipline the peace, the endurance and the wisdom we need. But with the end of the war our opportunity will have come: Europe will be full of hearts that are tender through sorrow. There will never have been so much sorrow in the world at one time. If in that day even a hundred Friends could go forth over Europe in the spirit of Stephen Grellet and William Allen, prepared to stand (if so required) before kings and rulers for Christ's Name, but aiming primarily at getting into closest contact with weary souls yearning for a way out of the terrible entanglements of a selfish doctrine and more selfish sentiment of human society,—and at showing them how obedience to the Word of Christ would have saved them, and may yet save them,—should we meet with anger and reproach? Perhaps; and need that hinder us? But far more often we should meet with gratitude and love. Yes, and if we went forth truly in the life and power of our Lord, we should win wide obedience to His Word.

Think of what it will be when the shouting has died away, and only the pain is left which life will never lay to rest in tens of thousands of hearts. Think of what an appeal might then mean, addressed to the hearts of mothers and fathers: "Your own lives are broken beyond repair: what can we do to keep this devastating horror, and probably horror far worse, out of the lives of your children? Can we not turn our hearts to God and to one another? Can we not yield our long-withheld submission to the Saviour of mankind, and in bearing His yoke find our inward rest and our social peace?" Could not we Friends, after all the mercies of God to us, speak of these things as of things we have tasted and handled and known for ourselves? And need we doubt of the demonstration of the spirit of power in our poor words? It would need faith and dedication, humility and meekness, and deep self-denial. It would need our best and wisest, both men and women. It would need those to whom their comfort, their status, their temporal interest, their very life, were made of no account lest they should fail God and mankind at this immense but fleeting opportunity. It should be the concern of us all—an action at least as united as the confession of faith out of which it springs; and its motto should be found in words now so familiar that we do not feel the shock of their impact, but revived then within us in the might of the Spirit that gave them forth: "I count all things loss for the surpassing worth of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord."

It may interest Friends to know that a friend of mine, who stands entirely outside all organized Christianity, told me that a Peace mission over Europe was the great necessity at the close of the war, and that the Friends occupied by far the strongest position for its accomplishment. His thought inevitably has taken shape here along my own lines; but his appeal to me (for such it was) had much to do with the present direction of my thoughts, and his profound confidence in Friends was at once a rebuke and a stimulus to me.

WILLIAM BLAIR NEATBY.

CONCERNING THE MINISTRY.

ALFRED LOWRY, JR.

After having been unavoidably deprived for a year of the bi-monthly stimulus of the Fellowship Papers, it was with no small joy that I delved into the parcel of six back numbers which recently arrived from across the Channel. One is able to get a cumulative impression of the whole year's thoughtful expressions of Friends of many minds, something of course not so easily possible by reading each issue as it comes out.

What stands out in boldest relief after this reading through of six numbers at once is that Friends are not nearly so much occupied with the sufferings and trials of the immediate present, nor in recounting what has been or is being done to relieve them, as in the outlook for the future. It crops out again and again. The instances cited below are but a few of many. In the number for Fifth Month I read: "But the problem that is heavy upon me is not the conduct of Wormwood Scrubs meeting, but the conduct of the meetings which so many of our 220 young men will attend when they are liberated. They have learned that a Friends' meeting means unity, sympathy, liberty and love. Let them not be disappointed when their time of imprisonment is over, and they come to see what a real Quaker meeting is like."

In the "Impressions of Yearly Meeting," there was strongly urged the plea that Yearly Meeting might not mark the conclusion of a year's completed work, but the commencement of a new year of unrealized possibilities, that all the time might not be given up to reports of committees, however ably active, but that there might be time allowed for fresh concerns to arise and develop.

Wilfrid Littleboy (in the Ninth Month issue) writes from Dorchester prison: "I am filled with joys and hopes and confidence in the midst of all the great problems which lie ahead." And most of all I was impressed with Janet Payne Whitney's letter of invitation to the Meeting for Young Friends at Yearly Meeting time. In giving the reasons why, in the past, this effort had "resulted in some measure of disaster," she writes that it was due "perhaps because we have met together each with some strong, preconceived idea as to what our individual message to that meeting was to be, and with not enough sense of corporate waiting upon God." She believes, however, that "the Quaker ideal of worship can overcome all obstacles. . . . And towards the end she adds: "This is our sacrament, our Communion Service."

Always, it seems to me, as we look into the future, we must keep this in mind—the importance of our meetings for worship—for two great reasons. First, for our own strengthening, like the "brook by the way," when we are thirsty and dusty and tired. Secondly, as the great demonstration of the truth of our supreme conviction: that it is by putting ourselves in a real sense at God's disposal, trusting Him like children, that He can make most use of our lives, a truth so simple that there are many who quite overlook it, and so profound that, once seen, nothing in life without it really matters.

If this is so, then the question of the ministry as exercised in these meetings assumes at once a tremendous importance. That great expression "a free gospel ministry," came at one time to have almost solely the significance of being unpaid. We may still speak of a "free ministry" but it must emphasize a freedom of a different sort—a freedom that does not always exist even where there has never been a salaried pastor. We need a ministry that shall be free in that the Spirit of Truth is wholly untrammelled, either by the obligation to preach or the habit of preaching.

There is not, however, the necessity which some suppose, of "developing" a ministry. This was the underlying meaning of that much-quoted and much misunderstood phrase of "G. F.'s" about "being bred at Oxford or Cambridge." There is not the need to develop a ministry so much as to make conditions such that a clear, powerful ministry can develop itself. Which is not just another way of saying the same thing. Intoning is no longer looked upon as the sine qua non of "inspiration," and the "speaking-tube" idea has happily all but disappeared. This last sometimes gave rise to difficult situations, as witness the person Rufus Jones likes to tell about, who, though a notorious misquoter of Scripture, was quite unamenable to the severest eldering, serenely replying, "I gave it as it was given to me."

Yet about the deepest and finest speaking there has always been a certain mystical element. It has been something more than the expression of various well-thought out ideas or what the French call an "explication de texte." To express our idea we frequently use the term message, and we should remember that a message is not so much something given as something sent. Only a few days ago, I heard one Friend (who ought to have known better!) say to another: "I hope thee may give us a message to-morrow," and I felt rather like telling him to brush up his etymology.

The first requisite for a ministry of this character is a condition of unburiedness. There must be time, not for the thinking out of the sermon, so much as for the meeting to be melted down together into a unified tenderness of spirit, so that there may be given a Divine response to the united aspiration and the common need. Out of that sacramental waiting, will arise the kind of ministry that Christ compared to a clear spring, hope-reviving, life-bringing, thirst-quenching.

Sometimes it will happen that there will be individual needs too great to be melted down and assimilated into the corporate need. Then if there are ministers sufficiently careful, humble, fearless, consecrated and sensitive, there will be instances of that speaking to individual conditions which has played in the past so striking a part in the history of our Society and which, except in certain conservative communities, has all but disappeared. Have you ever sat in a strange meeting, known to scarcely anyone, and heard a minister who never had laid eyes on you before stop short in his general discourse, turn towards your corner of the room, commence using the pronoun "thou," and analyze and "speak to" your own inward state in a way that was thoroughly astounding, not only to yourself, but to the friend who sat by you? I have.

Or have you ever felt, as I did when a boy of sixteen or so, a sudden prompting to go to a meeting you were not accustomed to attending, with the assurance that, if you did go, a certain minister (himself not a member of that meeting) would that day be there and would speak to your particular need at that time? And did you go and find him there and hear him speak? How clearly is the memory of that Fifth-day morning present with me as I write! If you have had such experience, you will find it hard to disbelieve in the reality and value of such a ministry. Our faith ought to be above the need for signs and wonders, but God does use them, and with convincing power.

There used to be a proverb "Practice what you preach," which emphasizes a most important desideratum but which in no way discourages preaching per se. In this practical age, however, the proverb has been rather revised to read "Practice, don't preach." How many a good address to a group of men now-a-days starts out: "First of all I want to say to you that I'm not going to preach," until in our desire to be free from hypocrisy, is to be unassumingly friendly, and not to judge lest we ourselves be judged, we are in danger of losing sight of the importance and essential dignity of the rightly uttered "spoken word" and the responsibility which goes with any true gift in the ministry. It is a wonderful gift, Paul rates it, you remember, above all the others, "but rather that ye may prophesy." To be not a mere basket for yesterday's manna, but the messenger of God, carrying to needy souls His fresh word, what more glorious mission could there be? We must keep always present that idea of being sent. The same old root occurs in many a word. The true minister's mission is to transmit the message that has been committed to his trust.

Let the fact that there is much ill-advised or insincere talking not detract from the dignity of a true call to the ministry, nor serve as a bulwark for some who would rather do something else than yield to that to which they have been called.

And let no one think that all ministry, to be "anointed," must conform to some particular pattern which he has set up. God has "many things to say" to us, many differently qualified messengers and there are many different conditions to be reached. What is the right attitude? Should one enter a meeting with one's mind as nearly a tabula rasa as one can make it? (I know one powerful minister who will not, I believe, even read the Bible before meeting-time lest some verse or thought stick and so defile or at least deflect the pure stream, and make it harder for him to be sure that what he is putting forth arises from a Divine prompting and not simply from his own active mind). Or, should one ponder long hours over the Bible or other books, trying to get under the weight of things so that a concern may have a more favorable soil in which to spring up, and the message may be uttered more clearly and forcibly from being long-thought over and carefully prepared? It is well in such matters not to be over-anxious. In talking with some of those of ripe experience, whose ministry to my mind rings truest, and whose inspiration I could never doubt, it seems evident that they nearly all have had the two experiences; one, of entering a meeting with no idea of what they were going to say or even that they were going to speak at all, and experiencing the "fresh bub-blings of Truth;" and at other times, of having a "concern" spring up and slowly ripen during days or weeks or even months, finally to be uttered when the right time came. Some are, as it were, shown the theme from the start to the conclusion with almost the words in which it shall be clothed, often the germ-idea is given and the minister entrusted to express it the best way he can. I believe, of course, that God can use a thoughtful, richly-stored mind in ways He cannot use a more primitive, child-like one, but I am equally convinced that the reverse is often true, and that it is often harder for the possessor of the more highly organized and trained mentality to distinguish between true and false promptings. The latter do occur and we would do well to remember the advice of William Penn, that if it was ever a cross to us to speak, we should never let it become so to keep silent. By being willing, yet on our guard, messengers ever ready to go when sent, yet ever waiting to be sent before going, we shall be able most faithfully to discharge our responsibility.

Let us accustom ourselves too entirely to a certain manner or method of procedure, and so limit ourselves too much and render ourselves insufficiently plastic for the various uses to which the Lord would put us, humbling experiences are sometimes permitted. I recall one such that may be instructive and for that reason I take the liberty of describing it. I had got so accustomed to seeing clear to the end of what I was going to say that I had rather fallen into a rut. Several days before a public meeting was to be held I felt certain that it would be my duty to speak there, and the opening sentence was given, but I could see not farther. I tried repeatedly but unsuccessfully up to the time of the meeting, which was very large. Would I have the courage to get up with that one sentence and run the risk of making myself ridiculous and spoiling the whole spirit of worship which had spread over the meeting in a manner unusually deep and real?

Finally, I felt that if I had faith enough help would be given. Trembling all over I arose. The opening sentence was spoken, and I saw another one in its place. So it went on till the end, I almost seemed to be reading from a book, turning over page after page on which was written but a single sentence. Whether or not what I said that night was ever of much help to the meeting I have never known, but for me it was a real test of faith and a humbling discipline. God wants us pliant.

He wants pliant ministers who will be so not only as to what they preach, but where. To come back once more to the guide-posts for the future, which I noted in my reading of the Fellowship Papers, let me repeat a sentence of Philip Butler's: "Nothing less is required than a great mission, a mighty publishing of Truth, such as took place at the time of our Society's founding." Underlying the sending forth of the Twelve, of the Seventy, of Paul and his various companions, of the First Publishers, of Wesley on horse-back, of unnumbered "public Friends" of a later date, including the interchange of visits between American and English Young Friends from 1912 on, there was a most sound principle. As it has been in all our Society's past, it will continue to be true I believe in the future, that nearly all of those who are called to the ministry will likewise be called to travel more or less. This does not signify at all the proverbial necessity for the prophet to seek his glory away from home. It does, however, take cognizance of three indubitable facts which are bound up with what we call "human nature": first, that most ministers, like the rest of us, are prone to emphasize certain aspects of the Truth more than others, which means that while the home congregation is growing deaf to reiterated messages there is a real need for those same messages in many other quarters; secondly, that we are all of us likely to attend more closely to an utterance from a fresh source put in a fresh manner, by someone who was 'enough interested in us to come and worship with us. Finally, that the traveling to other localities or other lands, and the mingling (entirely aside from the meetings attended) with different people who have different view-points and different problems, serve to stretch and broaden our "imperfect sympathies," and when home is gained again the Divine instrument is deeper and richer in volume and tone, more delicately sensitive to the breathings of the Spirit. I repeat that I believe that most who are called to preach will be called to travel, and they should be prepared to do so if they would be faithful messengers. It is for no restless wandering that I am pleading; there must be that "separating" for the work that is spoken of in Acts xiii, so that "they being sent forth by the Holy Ghost" will depart to preach the word of God.

To sum up, our Meetings are going to continue to be an important element in the corporate usefulness of the Society of Friends. In those meetings the ministry will play an important part. There are those being called and to be called into that work, some who would rather be doing anything else than that, some who have not yielded to that call but who have pretended they did not hear or who have tried to substitute a form of "Alternative Service."

That will not do. Remember in the condition Christ sets before those to whom He offers what Fosdick has called "life's supreme privilege," His friendship, the importance of that word "whatsoever."—From Friends' Fellowship Papers.

PARIS.

CHILDREN'S CORNER.

DOLORES AT THE SEASHORE.—Dolores is a plump, old Indian woman whom I know. Her home is in the California desert, one hundred and twenty-five miles from Los Angeles, on a Government reservation called Palm Springs, where some warm sulphur waters bubble up through the sand among palm trees and make a small oasis. Here with her husband Francisco, Dolores has lived all her life, and until last year had never seen the ocean.

To the desert Indians the Great Water beyond the setting sun is known only by hearsay, and it is a subject of romance to them; for to one brought up where water is the scarcest thing in the world, the idea of miles upon miles of it is nothing short of a miracle. So it was a great event to Dolores when some white friends of hers and of mine had her visit them in their ranch near Los Angeles and we all went one day by automobile to see the ocean at Long Beach.

Dolores was dressed in her best green silk skirt of comfortable width; and with her white, lilac-flowered reboso drawn snugly about her dark-skinned, placid face, she looked like a bit of the old Spanish California, as indeed she was. She spoke no English, and Spanish was our means of communicating with her. It was the season of the walnut picking; and as we drove along where merry families of Mexicans, squatted under the trees, were picking off the walnut hulls, while babies swung in hammocks from the lower limbs, Dolores uttered low exclamations of wonder. "So many, many trees!" she murmured in her soft Spanish. It was not so in the desert.

When we reached the seashore, we drove the car out to the top of a cliff overlooking the Pacific. Dolores stared without a word, but with all her eyes at the limitless expanse of glittering blue water, and was plainly afraid of it. Indeed, it took considerable persuasion to get her out of the car and to step timidly with us up to the wooden guard-rail at the cliff's edge. The wide stretch of sea fascinated her, and for a long time she spoke no word, only a long drawn "ah-h-h-h-h" under her breath, meantime holding tightly to the railing. Then, by and by, she began to observe with ejaculations of child-like wonder, objects in the water—a little fishing boat or two, a steamer on the horizon, some people near shore bathing. In a moment, however, her gaze would be fixed again on that miracle of endless water, and in an awestruck undertone she would repeat, "A mucha agua, mucha agua." (So much water, so much water.)

There was a flight of steps leading down the face of the cliff to the beach, and after a while we all went down. It was rather a terrifying adventure to Dolores to go to the very edge of that giant water, but once there she fell to picking up shells and sea-weed with all a child's fresh delight in such matters. It was then she first seemed to notice the action of the surf—how it ran up the beach, then drew back, then in again, then out, perpetually. Another wonder! Crouching on the sand with us, her eyes bright with interest, she beckoned to the creeping waves with one brown finger, and repeated again and again a phrase in her Indian language. Apparently it was an invitation to the waves to come to her. At any rate they did come, and we all had a lively scramble to save ourselves from a wetting—at which Dolores laughed as gleefully as the rest of us.

We stayed for two or three hours by the sea, and to the old Indian, the mystery of that boundless water seemed only to deepen. Her eyes were continually fastened upon it. I do not think she realized there was another side to it, until we told her the distance across was five thousand miles. "How many days is that?" she asked, for miles mean nothing to primitive people—time is their measure. When we said, "fifteen by steamer," there came from her another long drawn "ah-h-h-h-h," and her eyes were again riveted upon the ocean.

Compared with this, the man-made shows of the seaside resort near by seemed paltry. Of the merry-go-rounds she was distinctly afraid, and responded with a terrified "no-no-no" when asked if she wanted to ride. The gaudy displays of the shops awakened little interest in her. Like the old Greek philosopher who saw in the markets of Athens only a lot of things he did not want, Dolores merely remarked, as we strolled along, "Muchas cosas," (so many things). But whenever there appeared a vista of the sea in the spaces between the shops, she looked eagerly that way. Once she thus caught sight of a motor boat skimming along beyond the surf line, and asked in excited Spanish, "Is it fishing or taking a walk?"

When we turned our faces homeward, Dolores waved her hand and said quietly, "Adios, oceano" (good-bye, ocean). It had been a great day in her life; and some time, perhaps, as she sits beneath the palms in her desert home and the wind sweeps the leaves, as it often does, with a sound like the sound of distant surf, she will gather her weaving materials into her lap, and weave into a basket the story of that Great Water, with its waves that come and go, come and go, and the steamers, and the little boat that was taking a walk.

CHAS. F. SAUNDERS.

PASADENA, California.

"THE STORY OF A SMALL COLLEGE."*

A very intimate relationship with Haverford College—thirteen years as professor of mathematics and thirty years as President of the College, has given Isaac Sharpless the right in a conspicuous degree to tell the story of one of the leading small colleges in the country and to draw conclusions from that story which, having their basis in fact, are of intrinsic value.

The volume of two hundred and forty pages is fresh from the press of the John C. Winston Company, Philadelphia. The work of the publisher is of the best and nothing is lacking on this score except that the opportunity to enrich the pages of the book with prints of Haverford and Haverford men has for some good reason, doubtless, been studiously avoided. Aside from the portrait as frontispiece, there are but two illustrations—one of the ivy-grown end of Founders' Hall and the other a bit of the campus opposite, showing among the Summer foliage parts of three college buildings. One invariably regrets that ever an opportunity is lost to fix on paper the charms of the Haverford Campus, than which there is probably no lovelier enclosure in the environs of a city, justly famous the world over for the beauty of its suburban sections.

The story, as told by President Sharpless, is largely autobiographical, but one feels after he has read it through that the first personal pronoun has played a very inconspicuous place in the narrative; the very modest use of this and the absolute absence of all that magnifies personal successes and minimizes the reverse is one of the real charms of the history.

The opening chapters are all too brief, comprising a hasty sketch of the early settlers of the "Welsh tract" and the education fostered by Penn and his followers—down to 1830, when "two unofficial bodies of Friends, one in New York and one in Philadelphia, appointed a committee to labor together for the new school to be established;" a meeting fruitful of great results as the rest of the narrative portrays.

Haverford continued in name a school until 1855. "One of the first acts of the Board was to employ an English gardener, William Carvill, to lay out and grade and plant some sixty acres of the 108½ acres that constituted the original purchase. It is said that the amateur landscape gardeners of the Board were severely chided by their associates for this avoidable expense in the days of poverty; but any one who now notices the splendid trees of eighty years' growth and the whole umbrageous effect of the grounds, perhaps unexcelled by any other college in America, may appreciate that no better expenditure for the future was made in the early days."

The plan of life, the list of lessons, the enforced economies practised by the family and much else claim a passing comment, and we are brought early in the book to the date when the real recital we are promised in the title begins—the opening of a small college.

Joseph G. Harlan was the first President, though the title given him was Principal; but two members of the management were college graduates themselves, naturally a policy emanating from such a body must be lacking in much that it is now expected to represent. Among the matters to claim the Board's attention—"the table was a perennial source of trouble. A deficit appeared on the horizon and retrenchment was decreed in Philadelphia. At one time by cutting out milk they decided to save $300 a year and in a formal announcement at the college it was declared: 'we aim to furnish each student with two pieces of pie; further than that we do not go'. The student body in these early years varied from forty to sixty, and there was much of boarding-school discipline in the young college atmosphere."

With page 65 begins the story of President Sharpless's connection with Haverford. He can well afford to take us into his confidence and lay bare the trials of those first years in discipline, because they were afterwards crowned with such signal successes. These chapters must be to the rank and file of his young friends the most readable in the book and should serve the part of a veritable tonic to the young school-master, who finds the disciplinary end of his calling not only irksome, but a little perplexing and leads him often to put the query—"Have I made the right choice of a calling?" This chapter, entitled, "Somewhat Personal," every young teacher in a Friends' school had better read. If he fails to find some of his own difficulties portrayed, he can easily settle at once that the school-master instinct in himself is at too low a discount to warrant him in holding on.

The rest of the book, a very considerable portion of the whole, is the argument for the small college. The argument is based on an array of facts drawn from the experience of a man who for thirty years filled the President's office and through all sorts of college ventures, helped to hold the Institution true to the spirit of the small college, as he and his co-workers saw it.

This portion of the history is divided into three parts, each part discussing consecutively college growth in various features during the three decades of his presidency—then follows a chapter rather unique in its plan, but extremely interesting and amply justified, in which the author quotes extensively from annual reports submitted by himself to the Board. The final chapter advances six principles: 1—Haverford claims to be a small college—accepts with good grace the sentiment advanced by President Lowell of Harvard in granting President Sharpless a degree—"She put aside the lure of expansion and made the college eminent for sound learning, scholarship and character." 2—Haverford draws no narrow bounds in the matter of religious affiliations, but she makes no claims to being undenominational. 3—She stands for broad culture, rather than specialized proficiency in the student body. 4—She claims for her faculty a combination of rich scholarship with strength of character; the pension system based on benefactions of her own sons and the very generous salary roll, not exceeded by any other college of the same rank, in deed if by any of any rank, have made her teaching staff what others claim for it, the peer of the best. 5—The close interest on the part of the professors in student problems is perhaps due most of all to the personal fostering influence of President Sharpless himself, certain it is that it constitutes one of the strong assets of the College. "A student is a piece of humanity as well as an intellectual problem, and men of maturity ought to have something to give him." 6—A close hold has been made on the Alumni of Haverford. "The purpose has been to make the whole Haverford family, managers, alumni, faculty and undergraduates, a loyal and interested democracy." D. H. F.

*"The Story of a Small College," by Isaac Sharpless. Published by John C. Winston Co., Arch Street, Philadelphia. On sale at all book-stores—$2.00 net. [Edition limited.]

The following poem was written by Dr. Washington Gladden and printed on the back of a program of his church in Columbus. I believe it might be of interest and help to some of your readers.—DEVERE ALLEN.

LET HIM COME DOWN FROM THE CROSS.

(Matt. xxvii: 40-42.)

'Tis not thy foes that shame thee,
But they who blindly own thee,
And who with doubtful loyalty
Are seeking to dethrone thee.
They find in lowliness no praise,
No royalty in meekness,
Thy "glorious humility"
To them is fatal weakness.

The scandal of redemption
Is this; that Christ must suffer;
"Why needs must He endure the pang,
Our human needs to cover?
For if He be the Son of God,
And share almighty power,
Let Him come down and wield the rod
And glorify this hour."

He answers not. That silence
Stirs the carnal mind's suspicion.
"Why trust in one whose feebleness
Must doom us to derision?
Why seek the aid of blades that bend
And thus in weakness stab us?
In times like these we need not Christ,
Pray send to us Barabbas."

Thus speaks the modern Christian,
In days of war grown wiser:
"We want no molycoddle Christ,
We're here to fight the Kaiser."
We yet may learn His love to earn
As all His saints have known Him,
Nor ever dare His power to spurn
By seeking to dethrone Him.

—WASHINGTON GLADDEN.

THIRD MONTH 24, 1918.

HIGH HOPE.

Spring bursts, birds woo their mates, ever-during life again awakes;
But to the soul, perchance, the age, society, seems quickly dying.
Awake, O soul, touch thou the Source; let Him work in thee;
Purposely strive, hand in hand with Him,
That thou may forward move, a worthy atom in His continuous creation.

FOURTH MONTH, 1918.

—BY A READER.

SECOND ANNUAL REPORT OF THE PEACE COMMITTEE OF PHILADELPHIA YEARLY MEETING OF FRIENDS.

(Concluded from page 569.)

In the meanwhile an important work for the so-called alien enemies has recently been undertaken by our Committee. United States District Attorney Kane has solicited our friendly care for alien enemies released from internment; for others who might have to be interned, unless suitable work could be found for them; and for still others, who, having lost their positions in the barred zones, have been in distress and are needing help to obtain work. Considerable time and care have been given to the men who have been referred to us; and as the work is likely to increase, a secretary has been appointed who can give his whole time to looking after these distressed aliens, to whom we welcome this opportunity to convey our message of good-will.

In agriculture, food conservation, sewing and knitting, and service to the suffering at home and abroad, the work of the Peace Committee this year has been mainly practical in character. In response to the special need of the hour, we have helped to reconstruct the waste places and to repair the damages of war. But we have not on this account lost sight of the responsibility for other than remedial measures, however necessary these may be. Such a group as ours has a duty and opportunity in time of war, quite as much as at any other time, to do its part toward removing causes of friction, and toward creating new channels of national and international good-will. Now more than ever it is of the utmost importance that suspicion and misunderstanding between the United States and nations still friendly should not be allowed to develop. A large number of subscriptions to peace periodicals have been sent to prominent Japanese; and a substantial contribution has been made to the support of the Publicity Bureau in Japan, which labors to promote good-will between this country and our own. The Committee has made possible the attendance of several Mexican students at American colleges this year, and is planning to continue this work in 1918-19, a number of scholarships having been accepted both by men in this country and by others who are being prepared in Mexico. It is our concern as a Peace Committee to support freedom of thought and to cherish those liberal policies which must underlie international justice and a permanent peace. Two meetings have been held in the meeting-house at Arch Street with this end in view. To watch State and National militaristic legislation, we have recently appointed a subcommittee which is co-operating with liberal organizations along these lines. It seems almost certain that an attempt will soon be made to provide for universal military training in the United States and in this event we shall, as far as possible, support the administration in opposition to such legislation. To this end it will be necessary once more to rally the liberal forces of the country and to present to our fellow-citizens as convincingly as possible the dangers of such policy.

In the meanwhile, looking backward over the year's work, in which to a great degree the whole Yearly Meeting has shared, there is room for a deep sense of satisfaction when we consider the forward steps that have been taken. At home and abroad it has been a period of growth. At home, the very existence of a committee on which all American Friends can unite in a common service, is, in itself, a step forward that hardly seemed possible one year ago. Mutual respect and understanding are being thus developed between the different branches of Friends in America. Not only is this true, but our common cause with other conscientious objectors, especially those exempted with us from combatant service, is widening our sense of spiritual kinship to include those outside our denominational borders.

Abroad, the same change is taking place. Our workers are broadening their sympathies to reach beyond barriers of creed and custom, as they work side by side with each other rendering a common service to men and women of foreign tongue and alien race. In many cases, members of the Unit have given up personal ease and financial advancement to go out upon this unselfish mission. Particularly is this true of the older workers abroad, of those who have devoted themselves to the exhausting duties of office routine at home, and, above all, of those three members of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, who have lent their experienced services to the organizing of the work in France. Upon Charles Evans, the present head of the Paris office, is falling a burden of care and responsibility for which he deserves our especial gratitude. Indeed, when we consider the way in which those who were needed have been found to carry on the work, there is little doubt that the Service Committee has been the expression of an irresistible impulse of the time. In the deepest humility, as we realize our small share in a great world movement, do we repeat the words of Rupert Brooke,—

"Now God be thanked who has matched us with this hour."

But not alone by service to the suffering can we hope to meet the deepest needs of humanity in this, its great and dark catastrophe. With our accustomed and comfortable lives, but little disturbed as yet by the war, it is not easy for us to visualize all that is involved. To be matched with the hour! Let that thought fire our imaginations to conceive with vividness the full meaning of these momentous days when, for good or ill, a new age is being born. What is visible is but the lesser part. The destruction of property and homes, the snuffing out of countless lives and the suffering inflicted on millions are terrible and heart-stirring indeed, yet not even by these can we measure the true significance of our time. Moral and spiritual issues are the supreme stakes to-day. Events are irresistibly pressing home these issues for decision. The ways in which men are choosing their allegiance between conflicting ideals will go far toward determining the conception which shall dominate the world. History is asking us grave questions. Shall the world follow the old weary round of competitive antagonism under the goad of sordid self-interest or shall nations as well as individuals give their loyalty to the vision of a great and beloved community of all mankind united in a common fellowship of co-operative and sacrificial service? Shall this age perpetuate the delusion that evil can be conquered by shells and bayonets and violence or shall we dare to be Christians and make the great adventure of forgiveness and love? Is the standard which we shall hand on to the next generation to be only so much loyalty to Christ as is compatible with the demands of the State and of society, or only so much conformity to the world as is compatible with loyalty to Christ? If posterity, our children and our children's children, could look down upon this world to-day and know the consequences that are in store for them, with what breathless and thrilled suspense would they witness our decisions, rejoice in our victories and weep over our failures.

We stand to-day amid the moral wreckage of a materialistic civilization. The task for Christians is to lift mankind to a new spiritual plane and rebuild social life on the one sure foundation of love. For what is needed above all else is strong and sustained moral effort. Mere non-participation in war or other moral evils can of itself avail little. Service and neutrality toward disturbing questions of the hour may seem a reasonable course, yet as a policy for a religious society such as ours it cannot satisfy. Humanity's deepest needs will not be met save by positive constructive endeavor—not only to maintain the supremacy of Christian principles against attempts to set them aside, but also to persuade men to make them effective in life.

This should mean more than to content our consciences with adherence to comfortably broad generalities. Our best powers should be so definitely directed toward the vital issues of to-day that none can be in doubt as to the position of this meeting. The war is a daily denial of the brotherhood of all men. It should make us more earnest to practice our faith in the unity of all mankind in Christ. Military necessity and the claims of the State are made superior to the claims of conscience. It is our opportunity to stand unswervable for a free conscience which equals the basis of religious life. Military training in our schools is threatened. It summons us to see to it that the vicious philosophy of militarism is not given lodgment in the minds of the rising generation, with whom is the hope of the future. And while the method of war is being used to achieve the overthrow of evil the more need is there for us to show by word and deed our conviction that wrong cannot right wrong and that the way of love is the one sure path to the conquest of the evil will.

To play our part worthily in such a time is sure to cost us something. But as William Littleboy has said, "This is the day of our visitation. To our Society comes the Divine command, Arise, shine. And if we are to shine indeed it can only be by utter self-forgetfulness, by complete and final surrender of ourselves, our traditions, our prejudices, our machinery, to Christ." Only a great purpose will give us strength to pay the price. As we look ahead, the race we are set to run is a long one and as yet we have gone but a few steps. Like St. Paul, we must not count ourselves to have attained, but, like him, forgetting the things which are behind and reaching forth unto those which are before let us press throughout the coming year steadily onward.

On behalf of the Committee,

ALFRED G. SCATTERGOOD,
Chairman.
ANNE GARRETT WALTON,
Secretary.

GERMANY AND HER ALIEN ENEMIES.

THIRD MONTH 14, 1918.

EDITORS OF THE FRIENDS:—

Dear Friends:—We think you may like to have a copy of this interesting letter from Dr. E. Rotten, of the Berlin Committee for helping "alien enemies" which, as you know, started the first Autumn of the war. The account of what they did at Christmas is specially delightful to us.

Yours sincerely,

M. C. Fox.
(Per E. F. Howard.)

TRANSLATION OF LETTER FROM DR. ELISABETH ROTTEN, BERLIN.

MONTHOUT PLATZ, 2, N. 24, FIRST MONTH 24, 1918.

We received recently, shortly after one another, your two letters of the 12th and 19th ultimo, after having previously received, in different consignments, a total of about 200 copies of your fifth report, which have made us happy and for which we thank you most warmly. We learn with great joy that you describe your own activities and ours as entirely at one in spirit and have this time interwoven the description of our own efforts with yours in such a way as to make manifest in the clearest manner, the common nature of our philanthropic endeavors and our common recognition of the ideal of humanity. In its detail also your report is of the greatest interest to us and still more, of course, to those who do not know your work from the inside as well as we know it, through our constant connection with you and through the reports of the repatriated, but from your description, even those who already have a full knowledge would receive an entirely new and vivid impression. We will very willingly send copies of the report to the people mentioned in your letter of the 12th and likewise to those returned wanderers from England to whom it will be useful to be able to support their accounts of experiences there by such a statement. We should be very glad if you could possibly send us an increased number of copies of your fourth report also, since its contents supplement the new one in an exceedingly valuable way and we cannot possibly have enough material of this kind.

To-day I want to tell you briefly about the attempt made by us this year to brighten Christmas a little for aliens in our country. As in other years, we had not arranged any gatherings for the festival, as these, as mentioned already, do not appear to us to be the right thing, in view of the diversity of the nationalities and social spheres of our protégés, but so far as was in any way possible we have given some individual Christmas cheer to all those aliens at liberty, families as well as single persons, with whom we are in touch. Especially we thought of the children in this connection.

Among the prisoners this year also we had it specially at heart to think of those who were hardly expecting anything from other quarters, and so, through the special efforts of the Swiss Red Cross, in spite of the increased difficulties in securing permission for despatch of food, we have forwarded parcels to six camps to needy Frenchmen named to us by the representatives of the Hilfsausschusse (Aid Committee) as never having, during a long imprisonment, yet received a parcel. We did the same to the Serbians in the camp at Kongsbruck. Further, we were able to order from Copenhagen bags with little comforts for a large number of Italians who had only recently been taken prisoner. We were especially glad to give these particular prisoners some pleasure and encouragement at Christmas time, considering that they must have been more exhausted through their recent physical and mental trials than those who had been accustomed to the conditions of camp life for a longer time, and also for the most part they could expect nothing from home. Finally, we ourselves have been able to give some little cheer to the Russian civil prisoners in the camps at Havelberg and Holzminden, by gifts from our own country.

With regard to Ruhlben, we had planned some time before Christmas, in accordance with the wishes of the interned men, to ask that this year a general visiting day should be allowed for the prisoners whose families are still in Germany, with a Christmas festival in the camp itself, and in this connection we intended to refer to a similar event the year before at Alexandra Palace. Fortunately such a recommendation was not at all necessary. The authorities had already conceived the same idea, and granted the permission for such an arrangement, with the limitation that only the wives and children living in Berlin and neighborhood should come under consideration. The celebration was most happy, and we hope very much that a suggestion already discussed with the authorities to arrange a similar general visiting day for the more remote families may be carried out at Easter. We should like to arrange on this occasion that all women from outside Berlin shall be able to take part, including those who have had previously to deny themselves the visits permitted every three months, on account of lack of means and length of journey. For this purpose we hope to provide a free journey and hospitality in Berlin for all who are not able to pay for it themselves. As a slight compensation to those children of interned men, whose homes are outside Berlin, and who were therefore not able to take part in the Christmas celebrations in the camp, we sent, in the middle of last month—Dr. Higgins supplying us with those addresses we did not know—a circular letter to their mothers throughout the whole of Germany, and asked them to inform us of special wishes for each of their children. These we were then able to fulfill, to the satisfaction as it seems of both the little ones and their mothers.

With hearty greetings in the name of all our fellow-workers to yours,

Sincerely, ELIZABETH ROTTEN.

FROTH.—The south wind is blowing gustily from the sea, and the rough and tumble of the surf line shows white against the gray of the waters beyond. On the beach, the seas tumble and break into foam, and the froth blows airily away on the fresh breeze.

On the boardwalk, the sea of human beings ebbs and flows this bright morning. If you could hear the talk there, and mark the vanity of many, and the inane expressions, you would call much of it frivolous. That is the froth of life, the light emptiness that the wind blows where it will. But there is the underlying wave, and the tide, and the sea, if only we will have a mind for them! The froth of life is a poor substitute for the deep sea. Yet some of us seem to prefer the scattering bubbles to the sea itself.

FIRST REPORT FROM OUR WORKERS IN THE RE-INVADED REGION.—The following letter from Harold Hood, of West Chester, Pa., is the first direct word we have had of the stirring scenes of the last few weeks. We are daily expecting full and official reports from the Paris office, but we realize how little time for correspondence Charles Evans has had.

PARIS, Third Month 26, 1918.

DEAR MOTHER:—

Well, I have gotten some time at last to write to thee, and will give thee an idea of what has happened in the last few days. Starting last Friday morning (Third Month 21st) the guns on the front opposite us started up at about 4 A. M. and it was the worst noise I ever heard. It woke us up and at about 5:30 A. M. the German shells started to drop about two miles from us. It was the same all day, but we could not find out much news, so did not worry. Everything was quiet that night, but it started up again about 6 A. M. next morning (Third Month 22nd), and I guess it has been going ever since. I went out to run the tractor as usual that morning, and thought nothing of it, except that the German shells were falling a little closer. About 10:30 Darling came out and told me to hurry up and bring in the tractor as Ham had been evacuated and that we would have to leave soon. I took it in and packed up my stuff and we also got all of the other things together we could. Darling started off with the tractor about noon and we left with our wagon and cart and all of the horses about 1:30 P. M. German shells were falling about a half-a-mile away and the Germans themselves were not over two miles away. It surely was a fierce noise and we could see the shells burst and throw dirt and stones high in the air. You could also hear them whistle as they came over. The roads were just packed with refugees and troops, etc., and it took us two-and-a-half hours to go the first two miles.

Elliott and I had the cart and two horses on behind. We passed Darling on the way and went back (walking) for him to get some lugs which he had left. There were four allied guns back of our barn by that time and were firing all of the time, so we did not linger very long. Well, we got to Esmerly Hallon at last and after packing on some more stuff there, left for Grunry, arriving there about 8 P. M. We told them the news, so they started right away and packed up, working all night. We slept in a large attic, but got very little sleep on account of the noise. Next morning (Third Month 25rd) we started out about 8:30 A. M. for Montdidier, which was about fifteen miles away, and everything went O. K. until we got to the old front lines, then one of the carts from Grunry broke down, the bottom dropping out, after we had gone over a very bad bridge. We also had to repair another bridge before we could cross it. By the way, Darling arrived in Grunry finally, and had to leave the tractor at Esmerly Hallon on account of the roads being so crowded. So I guess the Germans have it now, unless some one moved it out.

We got to Montdidier about 7 P. M., and were sorry to hear that we could not get a car for our baggage in less than three days, so, as the Germans were still advancing, we decided to move on towards Paris next day. We went through Montdidier and about two miles the other side, then set up camp for the night along a creek. We set up our cots near the road and tied the horses to trees. We had quite a bunch of stuff—eighteen horses, one wagon, four carts and the tractor from Grunry. We were very tired, and although trucks were passing in a steady stream with fresh troops going to the front, we slept soundly. Two of us were on guard duty for an hour at a time. Harden and I had from 3 to 4 A. M. Some of our fellows helped refugees nearly all night, but not we fellows who walked and drove the horses. Some of the fellows who were not needed left us there and went to Paris. As one of the Grunry fellows who drove the tractor was not feeling well, I was given a job with Calvert to take the tractor on to St. Just. We started out about ten o'clock and arrived there about 6:30 P. M., about one-and-a-half hours ahead of the teams. Well, we got cleaned and got a good square meal (the first I had had for four days) and then a good bed with sheets (first I have slept between six months), and say I did not sleep. I got up yesterday morning feeling fine, so we looked around the town a little, then left for here about 5:30 P. M., after waiting three hours for the train. It was very late on account of conditions and we had a hard time getting on at all, although there were about twenty coaches on it. We stood all the way to Paris (about a two-hour trip), and were ready to go to bed again last night. I have been getting baggage and doing other odd jobs all day, and am going to have my teeth tended to at the Red Cross hospital to-morrow. I thought it would be a good chance. Have no idea where we will be sent, but will write to you later and tell you.

There are about six fellows still at St. Just who are taking care of the horses, etc., until we can get some carts to move our stuff either here or to a new section for us to work in. We got all away from the farm except the rabbits and a few tools, but we were very sorry to lose the tractor. Our trucks are still working up near the front, helping to move the civilians, and it is a big job.

I saw and heard enough in the last few days to do me for awhile. The German planes sure did get nery around our part as we were leaving, and I saw one only a few hundred feet from the ground and could see the black crosses on his planes very easily. I also saw about fourteen Allied planes bring one down in flames not long after leaving the farm. I must go get my supper now and will write again after I get settled.

HAROLD HOOD.

(HOME ADDRESS—West Chester, Pa.)

TO OUR BOYS IN FRANCE.

"Thou therefore, my son, endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ."

Stick to your post, my boys,
Stick to your post,
Nor let no cringing fear
Impair your work!
Stick to your post, my boys,
Stick to your post,
Though scarce two miles away
The foe may lurk,
The earth must still be plowed
To plant the grain,
The little homes made snug
For refugees;
Stick to your post, my boys,
Nor count the cost,
Nor seek the peace that comes
With careless ease.

Flee for your lives, my boys,
Flee for your lives,
The cruel shells are falling
As you flee!
The roar of war and tumult
Rends the skies,
And you must work in other fields
Than these,
The little homes you labored
To rebuild
Are crumbling once again
Before the blast;
The peasants, fleeing lest they Should be killed,
Are crowding with you
As you westward pass.

Stick to your work, my boys,
Stick to your work,
Though disappointment tempt you
To despond!
The grain must grow in other fields
In France,
The little homes made new
In lands beyond,
Take up your burden once again,
And on!
With vision clear that doubt
And failure scorns,
Till in the darkest hour
Before the dawn,
You know the victory of The Crown of Thorns.

—MARGARET COPE.

NEWS ITEMS.

REPRESENTATIVE MEETING.—As is natural to suppose, the burden of concern resting on the hearts of members of the Representative Meeting at its regular session, held in Philadelphia Fourth Month 19th, was in connection with affairs associated with the world's unrest. Public sentiment in these days of national trial is over-wrought; the position of Friends as opposed to militarism on conscientious grounds is, by many, misunderstood.

Sympathy was expressed for others not of our membership, who, like ourselves are loyal citizens, yet who cannot follow the popular currents of thought and action.

The Exemption Committee reported conditions in the military camps affecting the Conscientious Objectors; information has already appeared in THE FRIEND explaining the situation as fully as is thought best to be made public at this time.

A number of matters were referred by the late Yearly Meeting to the Representative Meeting for consideration.

The request from Concord Quarterly Meeting for advice as to the proper handling of Trust funds was referred to the Property Committee.

The minute from Women's Yearly Meeting having regard to suggested changes in the first Query, and the letter from Haverford Monthly Meeting in relation to the Sixth Query, were both referred to a committee.

In accord with the recommendation of a committee having the matter in charge, George M. Warner was approved as Clerk of the Meeting, succeeding Wm. B. Harvey, who, nominated by the same committee, was appointed as Secretary to the Yearly Meeting, with headquarters in Room 25 at Arch Street Centre, Philadelphia.

WESTTOWN NOTES.—Since returning from the Spring vacation on the 3rd inst., there has been an unusual amount of sickness. We have had several cases of German measles and mumps. Fortunately, there have been no cases of serious illness. The enforced absence from class work is, however, a serious handicap to many students, especially at this time of the year.

Tennis and baseball have started with much enthusiasm and swimming in the matatorium continues to be popular with both boys and girls. The boys have likewise revived an interest in quaits.

The Men's Faculty entertained the Boys' school at a supper at the Farm House on the evening of the 16th inst. Four of the teachers and several boys delivered speeches, the current running through them being the spirit of co-operation, which has been so prevalent this year. The supper was preceded by a baseball game in which the Faculty defeated the Second Association.

On the evening of First-day, the 11th, Robert Tarboek addressed the School in joint collection. Beside the story of Friends' Relief Work in Russia, he gave us a brief but very illuminating account of the Russian Revolution. C. W. P.

The first term of the Women's Christian College in Tokio began this month—Fourth Month. Dr. Inazo Nitobe is the honorary President of this new institution and Tetsu Yasui the Dean. The courses offered this year are English Language and Literature, Japanese and Chinese, Liberal Arts, and Business. Other courses will be added later.

A REVISED version of the Japanese New Testament has recently been published. It is considered a tentative edition to be standardized only after certain shortcomings have been overcome.

THE SEI NEN DAN.—A number of years ago, nearly every religious paper we picked up had some article or other about the Sei Nen Dan (Young Men's Associations). Recently, although these organizations are increasing with extraordinary rapidity, we hear but little about them. There are now in Japan something over 28,000 of these local young men's associations with a total membership of over 3,000,000. An interesting sidelight was thrown on the activities of these societies not long ago by the publication of the local Nagasaki papers of the resolutions made at the annual meeting of the heads of the twenty-six associations of that city. A careful scrutiny of these findings shows us how utterly inadequate these societies are in themselves to raise the moral or religious life of the nation and how necessary Christian leadership is if the tremendous potentialities in this movement are to be drawn forth into useful channels. —ERNEST TRUEMAN, Y. M. C. A. in the Japan Evangelist.

FRIENDS' SERVICE NOTES.—Not having received a reply to our cables to Russia we asked the State Department to endeavor to establish communication with our workers. The following cable has just been received through official channels from the United States Consul at Moscow:—

"Moscow, March 22, 1918.

Six Americans among Quaker workers of Buzuluk all well. Do not intend leaving at present. (Signed) SUMMERS."

Several persons have made inquiry as to the origin of the Friends' Service Emblem. The first work of Friends in the Franco-Prussian War was done for the City of Nancy, which had as its official flag the red and black star which has now become so familiar to Friends. When Friends left their work in Nancy they were presented by the Mayor and the people with a memorial of gratitude which bore the emblem of the City. This emblem came into some use among Friends as a badge of their work in other places at the time of that war. At the beginning of the present war English Friends were required by government authority to adopt an official emblem of their work and they adopted the star which had become associated with Friends' work in 1871. When American Friends entered into this work of war relief we were very glad to avail ourselves of the permission given by English Friends for us to adopt this same emblem.

Since our last report an additional $2000 for our work has been sent in by the Mennonite Church. This makes a total of $12,000 which they have contributed within the past few weeks. They have now promised to send at least $4000 regularly per month. A number of their young men have now been accepted for the Unit, and we are delighted with the extremely high qualifications which they show for the work. Many of them are carpenters, machinists, engineers, and come to us with the highest possible personal recommendations.

The interest in Friends' work and the desire to help it continues to spread. A contribution of 665 pages of copying work has just been received from one of the public stenographers who has been doing work for our office. Her note contains the following statement: "My best wishes for success in your efforts; it is a pleasure to handle your work and I agree with others that association with your work is refreshing and uplifting."

The following note of appreciation of Henry Scattergood's lectures is typical of a score or more which we have received from the many places which he has visited: "Everyone appreciated the coming and lecture of Henry Scattergood. His earnestness and ability to take one into the work abroad has made a wonderful and lasting impression on those who heard him (about 1000 in attendance), and the Department of Civil Affairs of the Red Cross is now known to be a vital, living, uplifting, constructive work that will receive more attention than heretofore."

The above note is from Plainfield, N. J.

"The American College and the Great War," an article by Robert L. Kelly, published in a recent number of Scribner's Magazine, has been given a Spanish version and published in Inter-America, which circulates among Spanish speaking people throughout North and South America.

FRIENDS of Cambridge, Mass., have initiated a plan that may well appeal to others. A food sale was held at the home of a well-known lady on an afternoon last month between three and six o'clock. The proceeds were to be divided equally between the Massachusetts Woman's Suffrage Association and the Friends' Reconstruction and Relief Work. Donations of food, recipes and flowers were asked for in an attractive notice of the sale. A daughter of President Wilson poured tea at one table and a great, great, grand-daughter of Lucretia Mott assisted her. One page of the folder of invitation was devoted to a description of Friends' Reconstruction Work.

GIFT FROM THE DOUKHOBORS.—A gift of 20,000 pounds of jam has been received by the Military Hospitals Commission from the Doukhobors, the Christian Community of Universal Brotherhood at Brilliant, B. C., for the convalescent soldier patients in the western hospitals and sanatoria. War is against the tenets of the Doukhobor faith, and exemption from military service was promised them by the Canadian Government when they came to the West from Russia to settle.

In the Doukhobors' gift are 7,500 pounds of strawberry jam, 7,000 pounds of raspberry and 5,000 pounds of various other kinds, including peach and plum. The fruit all came from the Kootenay District, and the jam was made in the Doukhobors' own model factory, which is noted for the purity of its products.

The following applies to conditions in England at the present time, as taken from an Exchange, the same is true, though to a less degree, with all that pertains to printing and binding of books in this country.

WAR PRICES AND THE BIBLE.—War prices hit some institutions harder than others. The immense popular editions which the Bible Society publishes are habitually sold for much less than they cost to produce. But under present conditions this loss grows abnormally heavy. Compared with the rates which ruled before the outbreak of war, the price of printing in England is now one and a-half times as much as it was. The price of binding has almost doubled. Packing-cases cost four times as much as they did. The price of paper is five times what it was before the war. These facts will suggest to any person of ordinary imagination the plight in which the Bible Society must be without a large increase in its funds.

REPORT OF THE AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE FOR WEEK ENDING FOURTH MONTH 20, 1918.

Received from 28 Meetings	$11,009.55
Received from 17 Individuals	428.00
Received for Supplies	39.40
Received for Armenian and Syrian Relief	40.75

$11,517.70

CHARLES F. JENKINS, Treasurer.

NOTICES.

The Tract Association of Friends has recently issued the following new Tracts, which may be had at No. 304 Arch Street:—

"Spiritual Reconstruction," by Max I. Reich. This is a brief plea for "dedication of heart and attention of soul" that the Kingdom of God may be advanced in these times.

"A Doctor Cured," No. 4E, and "Alone with God," No. 5E. These are brief anecdotes designed to be helpful to profane swearers. All the above are of convenient size to slip into an envelope.

WESTTOWN SCHOOL.—Parents who are considering entering children at Westtown for next year are advised to make application as early as convenient. We shall be glad to have parents bring their children to visit the School at any time. Such a visit on a week-day afternoon would give an opportunity to see the School in operation (the afternoon session closes at 2.50), and also to get acquainted with the athletics and other out-door interests of our boys and girls.

GEORGE L. JONES, Principal.

FRIENDS' LIBRARY, 142 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILADELPHIA.—The following books have recently been added to Friends' Library:

Blackwell—Little Grandmother of the Russian Revolution.

Brailsford—League of Nations.

Eaton—Green Trails and Upland Pastures.

GROSSMIDN—Exceptional Child.

JAMES—Arizona the Wonderful.

Kelsey—Friends and the Indians.

Kuhns—Peaceful Life.

Alberts—Church in the Commonwealth.

Rowntree—Co-operation or Chaos.

Stewart—Notes on Old Gloucester County, N. J.,

LINDA A. MOORE, Librarian.

MEETINGS from Fourth Month 28th to Fifth Month 4th:—

Gwynedd Monthly Meeting, at Norristown, First-day, Fourth Month 28, at 10.30 A. M.

Chester, Pa., at Media, Second-day, Fourth Month 29, at 7.30 P. M.

Concord, at Concordville, Third-day, Fourth Month 30, at 9.30 A. M.

Woolbury, Third-day, Fourth Month 30, at 8 P. M.

Abington, at Abington, Fourth-day, Fifth Month 1, at 10.15 A. M.

Birmingham, at West Chester, Fourth-day, Fifth Month 1, at 10 A. M.

Salem, Fourth-day, Fifth Month 1, at 10 A. M.

Goshen, at Malvern, Fifth-day, Fifth Month 2, at 10 A. M.

DIED.—Third Month 28th, at Miami, Florida, SAMUEL LEEDS ALLEN, in his seventy-seventh year; a member of Chester Monthly Meeting of Friends, N. J.

—, at his home, Moorestown, N. J., on the sixteenth of Third Month, 1918, EBENEZER ROBERTS, aged eighty-four years; a member of Chester Monthly Meeting, N. J.

Woolman School

A Friends' School for Social and Religious Education.

Six Weeks Summer Term:
Seventh Month 1—Eighth Month 10, 1918.

For Information, Apply to
ELBERT RUSSELL, Director,
WOOLMAN SCHOOL
SWARTHMORE, PA.

W. J. MacWaters

Let Me
Help You

In Selecting Your

RUGS AND CARPETS

Domestic -- -- Oriental

ALL WEAVES

The Home of Bundhar Wilton
"DURABLE AS IRON"

HARDWICK & MAGEE CO.
1220 Market Street

GLASLYN-CHATHAM

PARK PLACE

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

A Family House of Established Reputation.
Open Throughout the Year.

NATHAN L. JONES

Pocono Manor Winter Inn

POCONO MANOR, PA.

SPRINGTIME in the Pocono Mountains is ever a delight to those who admire and study nature. The Birds and Flowers are numerous and varied, and the Trout Fishing in the Swiftwater is wonderful.

J. W. HURLEY, Manager
(Pocono Summit Station, D. L. & W. R. R.)

FRIENDS AND THE INDIANS,

1655-1917.

By Rayner W. Kelsey.
Suitable for use by Study Classes.

FOR SALE AT $1.50 BY

FRIENDS' BOOK STORE

304 Arch Street PHILADELPHIA, PA.

RESIDENCE: 254 S. 44th St. BELL 'PHONE: Baring 2084X

WILLIAM OAKES

Plumbing and Heating Contractor
ALSO LEAD BURNING

260 SOUTH TENTH STREET
PHILADELPHIA

Bell 'Phone: Filbert 2666.

Hajoca

extra-deep Sink

Prevents overflow of water from dishpan to floor. Equipped with Hajoca Quick Faucets, which save time and prevent splashing.

Inspect it at our show-rooms, and see all the latest designs of Hajoca Bathroom Fixtures. Write for Hajoca Book, free.

HAINES, JONES
& CADBURY CO.

1130-1144 Ridge Ave.
(at 12th and Spring Garden Sts.)

W. B. WEAVER

UNDERTAKER and EMBALMER

550-552 N. 5th St., PHILA., PA.

Special Attention Given to Funerals
In and Out of the City. Also Chapel
Accommodations for Funerals.

BELL 'PHONE : ESTABLISHED 1880

To enjoy good health and a sound digestion use
PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT BREAD

made from the entire whole grain ground on a stone mill. A perfect food and natural regulator. Sold by all good grocers in Philadelphia.

Write for particulars to

PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT CO.

10th & Susquehanna Aves., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

WALL PAPERS—All Grades

Custom of Friends Specially Selected

FRANK C. BUEHL

Successor to S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON
902 SPRING GARDEN ST. - PHILADELPHIA

Store open until 10.30 A. M. Any other time by appointment only
Opposite Spring Garden Station, Phila. & Reading R. R.

ESTABLISHED 1750. BELL 'PHONE.

M. GATCHEL

126 N. 21st St., PHILA.

MILLINERY, PLAIN AND FANCY

'Phone, Spruce 3032

OUR aim is to make our customers feel that the Holmes Press is their plant. We have room for a few more such proprietors.

THE HOLMES PRESS

J. Linton Eagle, Pres.
1336 Cherry Street, Philadelphia

JOSEPH G. FOGG
FUNERAL DIRECTOR and EMBALMER

S. W. Cor. Sixteenth and Race Streets
Special attention given to Friends' Funerals
Bell 'Phone : Spruce 1646

SHETLAND PONIES

Oldest Herd in United States
Established 1883

Special attractive prices just now owing to change in business arrangements

HARTZELL BROS., - SEBRING, OHIO
Importers and Breeders

POCONO MANOR ASSOCIATION.

The Oakwood and Acorn Cottages, at Pocono Manor, will be opened about Sixth Month 20, 1918, for the accommodation of Friends, at moderate rates. Early application for rooms and board should be made to

LYDIA B. KITE,
Collingswood, N. J.

FOR RENT FROM SIXTH MONTH 1 TO NINTH

Month 30, 1918, furnished home on Haverford College campus. Nine rooms, two baths, garage.

R. W. KELSEY, HAVERFORD, PA.

FRIENDS' SCHOOL at ATLANTIC CITY, N. J. will need three experienced teachers for year 1918-19 for Seventh and Eighth grades, Fourth and Fifth grades, and Kindergarten. Apply to Principal,

HELEN L. FORSTYHE.

WANTED—BY A COLLEGE WOMAN, WHO makes a specialty of private teaching, a position as tutor or companion, preferably in a family of Friends. Excellent references given. Address it.

Care of "THE FRIEND," 207 Walnut Place, Philadelphia.

FOR RENT—EIGHT-ROOM FURNISHED COTTAGE, bath, open plumbing, hot and cold water, town and spring water. Several meals daily, half hour ferry service to Newport and Narragansett Pier. Excellent opportunity where there are one or more invalids in family. Areas must be taken at Nipponwood.

Apply DR. W. LINCOLN BATES,
Jamestown, R. I.

FOR RENT—OCEAN CITY, N. J. LARGE FURNISHED COTTAGE for Seventh and Eighth months. Five chambers. All conveniences. GEORGE

W. HAROLD TOMLINSON,
114 Yale Avenue, Swarthmore, Pa.

WANTED—A POSITION AS GOVERNESS and mother's helper in a family of refinement. Address "THE FRIEND," 207 Walnut Place, Phila., Pa.

TO ADVERTISERS.—THE FRIEND is now open for selected advertisements at the following rates: One inch, 50 cents, or 4 cents a line; no insertion for less than 25 cents. Long term rates given on application.

Friends having real estate to rent or sell, also those desiring board or rooms, should find THE FRIEND an excellent medium for reaching interested parties.

Standing business cards are also solicited.

Cheyney Institute

offers an opportunity each year to one hundred picked colored youths to train themselves in leadership. No people have a more just claim on the sympathy and help of others than those colored people who have faith in the future of their race through wise training.

Cheyney Institute offers this training and has proved by its graduates that it merits generous support.

The Managers endeavor to administer the Trust they have assumed, but must look to Friends and others for financial assistance in the work for these one hundred young men and women.

The Institute also offers a unique course for teachers in its Summer School. Most of the Eastern and Southern States are represented at this School and testimonials of the advantages gained from the Summer courses would satisfy the most skeptical.

Leslie P. Hill, Principal, is always ready to offer timely suggestions to any who have it on their hearts to assist in the laudable work that is carried on at Cheyney.

Because of the conditions which must be met, if the School is to continue its good work, the Board of Managers feel free to request Friends to include Cheyney among the charities to which they contribute, and ask that checks shall be drawn in favor of and mailed to

WILLIAM BIDDLE, Treasurer,
119 S. Fourth St., Philadelphia.

SEE WALKER & KEPLER

FOR

Good Electrical Work

531 CHESNUT ST. -- PHILA.

HARRY S. LEE

313 WALNUT STREET

PAINTER and GRAINER

ANTIQUE and OFFICE FURNITURE RESTORED
JOBGING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO ESTIMATES

Philadelphia's
Representative Store

ELKINS, MORRIS & CO.

BANKERS

REPRESENTATIVES

PAUL W. BROWN
JAMES P. MAGILL

LAND TITLE BUILDING
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE MATERIAL THAT WE SELL

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY
MANUFACTURERS
PHILADELPHIA

Letchworth Cottage

Spring Lake Beach, N. J.

Open for the Season 1918

A. C. & S. H. Letchworth

ASSOC. M. AM. SOC. C. E.

Bell 'Phone—Lombard 3412

EDWIN M. EVANS
CONTRACTOR & BUILDER

My jobbing department is well equipped,
prompt and efficient

338 S. LAWRENCE ST. :: PHILA.

R. C. Ballinger Ernest R. Yarnall John A. Stratton
TELEPHONES

Bell—Spruce 17-81 - Keystone—Race 637

R. C. BALLINGER & CO.

CONTRACTORS and BUILDERS

218 N. Thirteenth St. Philadelphia.

ALFRED C. HAINES

Building Glass and Paints

56 N. Front St., Philadelphia.

A COMPLETE LINE

OF

NURSERY STOCK

FRUIT TREES,

ORNAMENTAL TREES,

SHRUBS,

SMALL FRUITS,

ROSES,

CLEMATIS,

HEDGE PLANTS.

The Rakestraw-Pyle Company
KENNETT SQUARE, PA.

RAILROAD AND PUBLIC UTILITY BONDS

FOR

CONSERVATIVE INVESTMENT.

FULL PARTICULARS ON REQUEST.

WESTTOWN SCHOOL

On account of the operation of the draft, it is expected that there will be two openings in our teaching staff after this school year. One position is that of teacher of French, the other of Mathematics or possibly lower High School work. For at least one of the positions we desire a man who would have some duties in the dormitory life of the boys. The other position is open to either a man or a woman, and will include few outside duties.

There will also be two openings for secretarial work in the Principal's office, including work under the direction of the Registrar of the W.O.S.A. The position as School Secretary demands a woman with an interest in educational matters, possessing, if possible, a college education, preferably an Old Scholar, and with a working knowledge of shorthand and typewriting.

GEORGE L. JONES, Principal,
WESTTOWN, PA.

WM. H. PILE'S SONS

BOOK AND JOB PRINTING

422 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO THE

PRINTING OF BOOKS AND CATALOGS

GIRARD TRUST CO.

BROAD and CHESTNUT STS.

CAPITAL
AND
SURPLUS } $10,000,000

Acts as Executor, Trustee, Guardian,
Administrator, Assignee and Receiver.
Safes to Rent in Burglar-proof Vaults.
Interest Allowed on Deposits. :: ::

E. B. MORRIS
PRESIDENT

Premier Duplicating Co.

Mimeographing, Multigraphing, Printing, Type-writing, Addressing, Mailing, etc.

630 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

WANTED—A COMPANION FOR A WOMAN
Friend, in a suburban town.
Address "Z"—"THE FRIEND."

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 91.

FIFTH-DAY, FIFTH MONTH 2, 1918.

No. 44.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price $2.00 a year in Advance.

Publisher, DAVID H. FORSYTHE.

Editors { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
DAVID H. FORSYTHE,
MARY WARD.

Make remittances payable to

THE FRIEND,

No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

"MALADJUSTMENT."

As an originator of descriptive terms and phrases Jane Addams can easily take a first place in present-day affairs with President Wilson. It is she who terms the present world-situation one of maladjustment. Ordinarily, we regard the "wielders of phrases" as specially endowed geniuses. A little thought and investigation however, reveal the fact that this gift has the quality which Emerson's definition predicates of all genius. It is only another name for persistent application and hard work. In the case of the President and Jane Addams a keen philosophical analysis wrests the term or phrase from the inherent qualities of a situation. The closest possible scrutiny by any checking-up process that we can command detects no flaws in the knowledge or reasoning that culminates in such "winged words." Actually the process and the outcome of the process very readily carry us back to Homer, from whom we quote the expression "winged words." There has been no more certain basis of literary quality.

It may not be unprofitable to test such observations by applying them to this expression maladjustment, as descriptive of our most unhappy times. Is it a generalization that fits the small units—our own individual lives, as well as the largest units—states and federations of states? In our individual lives, whether we regard the most intimate family circle, or extend our consideration to the circle of our friends or business associates are not our difficulties those of maladjustment? Where there are no evil motives involved, is it not found, times without number, easy to correct these maladjustments and so to make an unworkable situation, work? A very homely incident will illustrate this point.

The Hoag family contained other seers than Joseph whose famous vision has claimed no small amount of interest even in some learned circles of late. It must have been about seventy-five years ago that one of these was engaged in a religious visit along the Atlantic seaboard. Two worthy elders in a community of Friends made the way easy for the visiting minister to make family visits. On one occasion they had driven twelve miles to the home of three maiden sisters who had been left in sole possession of a homestead in which the family had been located for two or three generations. These three sisters were strikingly unlike in gifts and temperaments. It was notorious that the family life was anything but harmonious. The discreet elders were very particular not to mention this fact to the Gospel ambassador. And so they all sat down together in a silence that seemed in no slight degree oppressive. They sat longer than was customary, when a move was made to separate. Then the minister said, under a very evident sense of compulsion, "The peace of God is not in this house." The peace of God came there—whether wholly as the result of this visit, or as the culmination of religious conviction which this visit emphasized we do not know. After the changed relations were well established the elder sister was often heard saying, "It is no trouble to live together if you will only understand one another." The power "of understanding one another" to resolve maladjustments was probably not over-emphasized in this case—it will often work even when there is a background of evil motives such as jealousy and envy. From whatever cause such situations in the personal circles of life may result, is it not clear that they are cases of maladjustment? Accurate analysis and acute social instinct are evidently responsible in these relations for such a term.

Are the difficulties in the larger social and religious groups so plainly cases of maladjustment? Such an interrogation at once brings to mind certain seemingly irreconcilable differences of theological position. Let us ask, are they actually irreconcilable, or are they too maladjustments? A recent writer in the Churchman Afield has thrown no little light on this subject. He is dealing with what the Manchester Guardian had called "The Reproach of Puritanism." The assumption of a general condemnation of Puritanism is shown to be without adequate foundation. We quote at some length: "Original Puritanism was a very noble and beautiful thing. Quite apart from its ecclesiastical implications, it stood for a high ethical ideal and a deeply religious view of life and duty. In an age of light living, self-indulgence and forgetfulness of God it raised a protest that could not be ignored. But corruptio optimi pessima. It degenerated, became sour and grim; tithed mint and anise and cumin and neglected the weightier things. It must be judged, however, by its best, and its best was very great. The Free Churches have never consciously abandoned its ideals, and they will soon find themselves driven to revive them. They still stand for the religious view of life. This is quite compatible with abundance of amusement and recreation. But it is not compatible with making sport and pleasure the chief end of existence, nor will it allow those forms of recreation which destroy the innocence of the young and feed the fires of passion."

This is plainly a call to correct a maladjustment in religious society. It has become the fashion of our modern times to decry Puritanism and with it all those doctrines and teachings centering about Calvinism. Doubtless much misplaced emphasis in teaching has been responsible for this wholesale condemnation, but a new order and a new religious outlook so far as such have been secured, have shut themselves out from much good by failing to adjust the new point of view to the old and so saving the wealth of the old for present-day uses. Amongst modern religious teachers, perhaps no one better than Dr. McGiffert has shown what a great loss has resulted from this method of protest and reaction instead of reconciliation and adjustment in the religious world. Maladjustment has been—must we not say, continues to be—the root of endless tragedies in this line. The new condemns the old in a sweeping wholesale way, and so retards the progress it would foster.

The illustrations herewith cited are but commonplaces that could be multiplied quite indefinitely either in the limited field of family-life or the larger denominational circle. They disclose the principle which is at the basis of international turmoil. One naturally reflects that the ready contribution for the individual to make to world peace is to resolve these maladjustments in the limited circles where our lives are a factor. The genuineness of our pacifism cannot shirk this test. International anarchy is founded in the final analysis in personal maladjustment. This, however, is not the final word for each of us in the extremity. There is another duty to which in degree we may all be called.

Great principles of right living have a scope on different planes. This is particularly true with adjustment as the educative force of life. In substance and manner of working the several planes present varieties that are at once independent of each other and at the same time subject to profound interaction. Thus a church family can hardly begin to resolve its difficulties without a definite reflection of better relations in family affairs. How much more, to adopt the apostolic term of comparison, are state and inter-state efforts at adjustment reflected in a better ordered society! The establishment of courts of law is the ready-to-hand example of this great truth. The present confused world situation would be much more hopeless were it not for the moving picture of a Hague World Court on the international screen. Even those most bent on war turn to this means to end war.

So our appeal is broader than that for personal and denominational adjustment. We should lend the energy of our thought and act to further discoveries of the practicability of pacific international adjustments. It is a large field and a difficult one. We may not hope to become experts in it. The fundamental principle we can grasp. We shall do so best, by a practical application of it in our personal field. In this way we shall be prepared as an intelligent constituency of the new world order. If our Society of Friends can put itself actively in this effort it will be surprising if we do not have some material to contribute that will worthily maintain our line of descent from William Penn in his dream of an international court. This line of Peace work must not wait till the war is over. We need "dreamers of dreams" now, but such dreams demand the most exacting thought and study. Jane Addams has gone to the root of the matter in her discriminating analysis. Shall we join forces like hers in building a worthy superstructure? J. H. B.

"THINK not that thy trials are insurmountable barriers unto thy progress, they pave thy way unto God's presence."

WORDS.

(Matthew xii: 36.)

Words, words, words,
Idle, thoughtless words;
Not the loud and blatant curses,
Rather those, whose cut far worse is,
Keen, sarcastic peccadillos,
Driving sleep from many pillows.
Words, we never should have spoken;
Words, for which some heart has broken;
Words that waken needless fears;
Words that bring the bitter tears;
Words that taint a brother's name;
Words of obloquy and shame;
Gossip, slander, worst of all,
Words we never can recall,
Who, before God's judgment throne,
These to his account must own?
Shall I?

(Isaiah i: 4.)

Words, words, words,
Loving, cheering words,
Golden words in season spoken;
Healing words to hearts nigh broken;
Words of comfort, words of favor,
Telling others of a Saviour
Who will come with words of peace,
Speak to burdened hearts release,
Brightening life's weary ways,
Lighting up life's darkest days,
Hearts be 'lumined all the while
By the presence of God's smile,
Who, with words like these, will win
Some one from the path of sin?
"Inasmuch as ye have done it,"
Christ's own welcome, who'll have won it?
Shall I?

—W. A. WELLS.

WORDS OF FRANCIS HOWGILL.

Francis Howgill wrote and gave forth the following paper for the encouragement of his friends, twenty-eighth of Third Month, 1662:-

The cogitations of my heart have been many, deep and ponderous some months, weeks and days, concerning this people which the Lord hath raised to bear testimony unto His name, in this the day of His power; and intercession hath been made often for them to the Lord, and a patient waiting to know His mind concerning them for the time to come; which often I received satisfaction in as to myself, but yet something I was drawn by the Lord to wait for, that I might comfort and strengthen His flock by an assured testimony. And while I was waiting out of all visible things, and quite out of the world in my spirit, and my heart upon nothing but the living God the Lord opening the springs of the great deep, and overflowing my whole heart with light and love; and my eyes were as a fountain because of tears of joy because of his heritage, of whom he showed me, and said unto me in a full, fresh, living power, and a holy full testimony, so that my heart was ravished there with joy unspeakable, and I was out of the body with God in His heavenly paradise, where I saw and felt things unutterable, and beyond all demonstration of speech.

At last the life closed with my understanding and my spirit listened unto Him; and the everlasting God said: "Shall I hide anything from them that seek My face in righteousness? Nay, I will manifest it to them that fear Me; I will speak, do thou listen, and publish it among all My people, that they may be comforted and thou satisfied." And thus said the living God of heaven and earth upon the twenty-eighth of Third Month, 1662.

The sun shall leave its shining brightness, and cease to give light to the world; and the moon shall be altogether darkness, and give no light unto the night; the stars shall cease to know their office or place; my covenant with day, night, times and seasons shall sooner come to an end, than the covenant I have made with this people, into which they are entered with Me, shall end, or be broken.

Yea, though the powers of darkness and hell combine against them, and the jaws of death open its mouth, yet will I deliver them, and lead them through all: I will confound their enemies as I did in Jacob, and scatter them as I did in Israel in days of old. I will take their enemies; I will hurl them hither and thither, as stones are hurled in a sling; and the memorial of this nation, which is holy unto Me, shall never be rooted out, but shall live through ages, as a cloud of witnesses, in generations to come. I have brought them to the birth, yea, I have brought them forth; I have swaddled them, and they are Mine, I will nourish them and carry them, as on eagles' wings; and though clouds gather against them, I will make my way through them; though darkness gather together on a heap, and tempests gender, I will scatter them as with an east wind, and nations shall know that they are My inheritance, and they shall know I am the living God, who will plead their cause with all that rise up in opposition against them." These words are holy, faithful, eternal, good and true, blessed are they that hear and believe unto the end; and because of them no strength was left in me for a while; but at last my heart was filled with joy, even as when the ark of God was brought from the house of Obed-Edom, when David danced before it, and Israel shouted for joy.

FRANCIS HOWGILL.

[The last page of Frank Birrell's excellent paper upon Friends Threshing in France was omitted from the article as first sent from Paris, and has just arrived.—Eds.]

It is impossible to give within a short sketch any real picture of the magnificent courage and many noble qualities of the French peasants. No one who has come to know them, whatever his occasional exasperation may be, can fail to feel for them the deepest affection, and no foreigner will ever have better opportunities for getting to know them than a Mission thresher.

Their individual sufferings have been far greater than any the English-speaking members of the Alliance will have to endure. Their population was smaller and their share of the casualties has been far heavier. For three years a large section of the people has been under German domination or else stranded in some strange corner of France, where they would never before have dreamed of going; or else, though they have remained in their native village, they have seen their homes, barns, animals and machines completely destroyed. Tuberculosis and other diseases have greatly increased. The result might well have been the demoralization of a people. That it is not so is due to the individual character and boundless vitality of the French peasant who has guarded through everything such a large measure of his former vivacity and will to live. It is these qualities that make working with him such a pleasure and make it so tremendously worth while.

LETTERS FROM FRANCE.

THIRD MONTH 10, 1918.

I have been up to a meeting of the General Committee, held once in six months, and was elected a member of the Executive Committee, which meets once a month, so that I shall have a change of scene once a month now, and come up to Paris to meet the most attractive members of the mission, a privilege I value highly. We have had three days of committees and sub-committees and it is very good to have a day of rest after it all. All but three or four of the British are to be turned out of the Somme, but those necessary for our work are going to be allowed to stay, but at present our intention is to try to finish up what work we have on hand in the next six weeks and then discuss our immediate future at another sub-committee. We have almost finished the really pressing repairs and could probably be better employed in more devastated regions. The British won't allow any British of military age in the zone of their armies, so that we shall have to move anyhow, as everyone is anxious to mix up the two nationalities. But over against that seems to be a very definite obligation to help these people over here. Charles Evans is bearing a very heavy load and though I do not see him very often, it seems to be a satisfaction to him to have me where he can lay his hand on me. Every single member of the Mission seems to be a separate problem for him and some have to be given up in despair.

We had a very satisfactory time in getting up to the Committee meeting last week. We went early to Roye and took lunch at the Café de la Paix, where I asked one of my friends in the Military Police whether the train went at 2.30. I found that was O. K., but one of the intelligence department, who was sitting at the next table, came over to our table and asked us if we wouldn't rather ride in their auto to Montdidier and take the 1.30 express. Of course, we expressed great enthusiasm. "Well," said he, "if you'll walk out to the town limits, we'll pick you up, but step lively, so we can catch the train." So we stepped lively and were picked up just as soon as we were beyond the limits and then we had a sample of military car driving. It was really thrilling and we really, I suppose, took no chances, but the driver had evidently been on missions of importance before, and we made some wonderful time. We skidded into a large boulder at the entrance of Montdidier and blew out a tire, but limped into the station with fifteen minutes to spare. There we were guided past all the sentries by the intelligence man, and, therefore, got into Paris at four instead of nine p. m. It was beautiful to come through an undevastated landscape again and see the beautiful farms well cultivated and houses with no shell holes in them or in their roofs.

Our meeting was very full and while we decided on nothing very vital we had many interesting discussions and learned to know a good deal more of the Mission. There may be, however, a large part of the work that is not just labor undertaken by us in the direction of agriculture and industry along new lines, and if we can be persuasive enough in co-operative channels. The planning and building of houses on better lines and the development of garden sites and social centres, distribution of live-stock, such as goats and hares, and the introduction of new village industries and the protection of the people against exploitation by middlemen. It means, of course, that we shall have to hold any quantity of trained workers after the war, and that those that can't talk French won't be of a great deal of use. Sitting here in Paris, with the Spring sunshine pouring in through the open window and the pleasant associations of the last three days still very fresh, I want to stay and see it through, and I don't believe there is much chance of my early return. Charles Evans, Sam Morris and I had lunch together at a little eating house over in the Latin Quarter, which is the only time I have had a cheap meal in Paris that was really O. K. Day before yesterday Jim Whittall turned up, and he and his brother W. and I have been together a good deal yesterday and day before. He is very anxious for me to spend my vacation with them on the Sussex Downs if I can, but I shall have to put it in somewhere studying hard at French, for we Americans need very much a French-speaking Secretary here in Paris as part of the general outfit, and some of the administration have been at me to take the job as soon as I can put my French up to suit—if that should ever be possible. But I can't anyhow get away until we finish up Gruny, which we are going back to-morrow to speed up, and I hope we shall soon begin to see an end of things there.

J. H. H.

THIRD MONTH 18, 1918.

Kenneth Cross and I came up from Paris together a week to-morrow, leaving at seven o'clock in the morning Summer time (the clock having been moved on an hour), which meant getting up in the dark and chasing to the station before we were really awake. We had no adventures worth speaking of, but the country was beautiful with frost. It cleared off into a brilliant warm Spring day and we have had a succession of days just like it, some warm and some colder, but from the birds and flowers I think we can now say that Spring has come. We haven't changed our time of work or meals to the Summer time yet, though I am anxious to do so, as getting to work later in the morning keeps us from being delayed by the frost, but that I hope will soon pass away and then we can have dinner by daylight, which is almost possible now.

We are now definitely isolated in the war zone and can't go to Paris except on a doctor's certificate or on absolutely urgent and necessary business. I have just succeeded in getting lists from four or five people who ought to be relieved according to the Mayor, and shall need more money than I have in bank to fill all their wants, as everyone of them needs at least one bed, which will cost from three to four hundred francs. The lists include everything from goats to clothing for their children. ——— asked if we needed anything here for the children in the way of clothing and I have no doubt anything could be used. Some people are so poor that they are using knives and forks that they picked up in the rubbish heaps where they were thrown by the Germans.

I wish you could have seen the old carpenter's joy when I took him his tools. There were seven planes of different sorts, a buck saw, a brace, a reamer and a pair of compasses. "Tres chic" was what he called them and he beamed all over and tried to pay for them. He has written a letter which I am mailing to Arndt to-day. Edmund Harvey was very much impressed with him and his pleasant manners. He is over seventy years old and lives all by himself; he showed me his bed, which he made fifty years ago, and which somehow the Germans spared. He seems to be getting work now from the richer people of the village and I expect will be able to hold his own. His name is Grane.

Maxwell Wray has been collecting lists of peoples' needs for me and has promised to write them out to-morrow and give them to me with the details of their troubles—most of them are families of farm laborers who, of course, had nothing saved up except in their furniture and can't get more now, for the men are soldiering or civilian prisoners in Germany. I called on Mme. Ledoux yesterday about the goat she wants for her little girl and her mother who is a sad dyspeptic, bent double with mal'alestomac. I have the butcher scouring the country for one now and expect to hear from him in a week. It will cost about 45 or 50 francs—a tremendous price. It ought to be 35.

Meanwhile our work is going on. I have quit Mme. Varlet's roof, about three-fourths done, and am working on Mme. Ondailles, as the Ondailles are living in their house and the roof needs repairing badly. The trouble, of course, is lack of slates, but we have enough to do some of it. Mme. Varlet had a lot of slate-roofed farm buildings which were demolished and I could get all I wanted from them, but you can't take one person's slate for another—it is impossible. They won't help each other out that way at all, especially when they have need of the things themselves. It is perhaps not to be expected.

We are hoping to finish up the most urgent repairs here and consider the situation in about six weeks' time, meanwhile Angus is investigating the locality near Soissons to see if we can go there to make similar repairs and near Verdun. There seems to be a definite feeling that I am needed in the Paris office, but nothing definite has been said about it. If I could conduct a French correspondence and work with French officials, I believe they would take me on at once, but I refuse to learn French from these people, their pronunciation and grammar are both so bad. I shall probably get a holiday soon, and spend it grinding at French, perhaps at Tours, which will be a rest and I hope entertaining. Charles Evans was here on the 14th and 15th and spent most of his time digging Mme. Barratt's garden for her. Evans has great hopes of C. J. Rhoads coming over and is busy writing urgent letters to that end. There seems to be a great deal of work to be done in the Red Cross in connection with our work and it keeps Charles very busy all the time, and he is very seldom able to get away and visit us in the various parts of the country where we are, which is a most useful thing to do, and keeps people in much better humor, although I have nothing to complain of in this respect and must say our fellows take the uncertain hours of our meals with great patience.

I don't know what to say about publishing my letters. There is a rule in the Mission that letters intended for publication shall be censored by the office in Paris, but I don't want to send my letters there, and in fact I have run out of interesting facts and incidents, and the routine here goes on almost the same from day to day.

I could touch up my letters with what we see of the war, but it is wiser to play entirely safe with the censor and not write anything that might be questioned and I hope I have done that.

Meanwhile "Bon Courage," as the peasants say, when we set out to work and with love to all.

J. H. H.

LINCOLN AND THE FRIENDS.

The statement is often made that there was something of the Quaker type in Abraham Lincoln, and it is usually followed by the assertion that he was of Quaker ancestry.

As one takes the direct road through Berks County, Pennsylvania, leading from Pottstown to Reading and keeping back from the Schuylkill River, he will see, fronting a by-road, but not far from the main thoroughfare, he is traveling, a low limestone building, which has all the characteristics of a Friends' meeting-house. If interest proves strong enough to cause him to stop for a few minutes and make the little detour required for a visit, he will be amply repaid, for in the little enclosure surrounding the closed meeting-house, the Historical Society of Berks County has placed a giant boulder, brought by ox-teams from the nearby mountain and has had cut into the face of the stone this inscription: "Exeter Friends' Meeting House and Burial Grounds. Ancestors of President Abraham Lincoln and of Daniel Boone are buried here."

When the compiler of the "Dictionary of Congress" wrote in 1858 to Abraham Lincoln for a sketch of his life, he received in return a very brief reply in six terse statements. There is little history of the early life of Abraham Lincoln worth retaining; this, however, belonging to the family record links his name with Friends:

The family was of English descent and may have originally emigrated to America with William Penn's followers. Whether their first home was in New England or somewhere in the Middle States is a mooted question, but before the middle of the eighteenth century, when the northern section of Chester County was developing its iron mines, which later gave a full quota of metal for the American cannon used in the Revolution, there was a Quaker who presided as head blacksmith at the Coventryville Forge. This man was an ancestor direct or collateral to the late president, and here the family being brought into close association with the Friends, who had their meeting-house in the little village of Nantmeal a short distance away, it was natural that they should join Friends "through conviction." Later, they moved across the river and the farm is pointed out where they lived, but a few miles from the Boone homestead—the birthplace of Daniel Boone; Exeter then became the meeting for the Lincoln family and here in the little grave-yard already referred to, the great grandparents of Abraham Lincoln were buried. About the middle of that century (1750) Abraham Lincoln—the grandfather of the president, began to put into execution the spirit of the rover, a strong characteristic of the family, and from here on through Virginia, Kentucky, Indiana and Illinois, history finds solid ground on which to stand, but with the exodus from Exeter, all connection of the family with the Society of Friends must be given up. ..

Amelia Mott Gummer's "The Quaker in the Forum, ..

should have a second reading on the part of those of us who read it first when she published it in 1910, others to whom the book is only a name will find it most appropriate reading for the present time. What follows—omitting parts only because the space is so limited, is taken almost verbatim from her book.

In the autumn of 1862, Eliza P. Gurney, widow of Joseph John Gurney, under an impelling sense of duty, made a "religious visit" to the White House at Washington—she was accompanied by Hannah B. Mott, John M. Whitall and James Carey.

After two hours' delay in the waiting-room, a private audience with President Lincoln was granted them. He received them most cordially, fully understanding that they had come purely upon an errand of sympathy and love; and the intense anxiety on his face stirred their hearts. Hannah B. Mott took copious notes, and at once wrote down the remarks made by the President during the interview. She writes:—

We once more repaired to his mansion, where we were at once taken up into his office or private parlor. His tall commanding figure and cordial grasp of each of our hands as we were presented, made us feel as if we were indeed in the presence of a great man. He pointed us to seats, and asked Eliza something about England, and made a remark about the rain, when Eliza commenced, with a great deal of feeling, to address him. She assured him of the deep interest and approval of his course by many thousands on both sides of the Atlantic, especially in regard to his act of letting the oppressed go free, encouraging him, under his great responsibility, to look for his light and his strength in his God. Altogether, I think I never heard her more favored or more weightily in her ministry. She spoke at some length, and soon after her communication, knelt in solemn prayer for "our chief magistrate." I cannot pretend to do it justice. It was a touching scene, and never, I think, to be forgotten. The President listened in the deepest attention. . . . We found afterward that Stanton, the Secretary of War, opened the door, but seeing that something was going on retreated, leaving the door partly open, when the private secretary came in, and after the President spoke to him, promptly retired.

Eliza Gurney soon after rose, when the President also stood, and taking her hand, responded in the following words:

I am glad of this interview. In the very responsible situation in which I am placed, as a humble instrument in the hands of our Heavenly Father, I have desired that all my words and actions may be in accordance with His will, but, if, after endeavoring to do my best with the light which He affords me, I find my efforts fail, then I must believe that, for some purpose unknown to me, He wills it otherwise. If I had had my way, this war would never have been, but nevertheless it came. If I had had my way, the war would have ended before this, but we find that it still continues, and must conclude that He permits it for some wise purpose, although we may not be able to comprehend it, for we cannot but believe that He who made the world, still governs it. I repeat that I am glad to have had this interview with you.

Nearly a year later, Eliza Gurney received a request through the Commissioner of Agriculture, Isaac Newton, that she would write to the President again; and having already had it on her mind, she did so under date, "Eighth month 18th, 1863," expressing her continued sympathy and prayers for the President in his time of trial, and fully endorsing the words of his recent proclamation for a day of thanksgiving and of prayer that "the angry feeling that has so long sustained this needless and cruel rebellion may be subdued, the hearts of the insurgents changed and the whole nation be led through paths of repentance and submission to the Divine Will back to the enjoyment of union and fraternal peace." The next year, President Lincoln sent to Eliza Gurney the following acknowledgment of her visit and letter:

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, September 4, 1864.

ELIZA P. GURNEY:

MY ESTEEMED FRIEND:—I have not forgotten, probably never shall forget, the very impressive occasion when yourself and friends visited me on a Sabbath forenoon two years ago. Nor has your kind letter, written nearly a year later, ever been forgotten. In all, it has been your purpose to strengthen my reliance on God. I am much indebted to the good Christian people of the country for their constant prayers and consolations, and to none of them more than yourself. The purposes of the Almighty are perfect, and will prevail, though we erring mortals may fail to accurately perceive them in advance. We hoped for a happy termination of this terrible war long before this; but God knows best, and has ruled otherwise. We shall yet acknowledge His wisdom and our own error therein. Meanwhile, we must work earnestly in the best light He gives us, trusting that so working still conduces to the great ends He ordains. Surely He intends some great good to follow this mighty convulsion, which no mortal could make, and no mortal could stay. Your people, the Friends, have had, and are having, a very great trial. On principle and faith opposed to both war and oppression, they can only practically oppose oppression by war. In this hard dilemma, some have chosen one horn and some the other. For those appealing to me on conscientious grounds, I have done, and shall do, the best I could and can, in my own conscience, under my oath to the law. That you believe this I doubt not, and believing it, I shall still receive for our country and myself your earnest prayers to our Father in Heaven.

Your sincere friend,

A. LINCOLN.

The original of this touching letter is preserved in the records of the Historical Society of Pennsylvania. Eliza Gurney wrote once more to the President, under date "Ninth month eighth, 1864," and after the close of the war in 1865, followed in a few days by the assassination of the President. Eliza Gurney's first letter was discovered in his breast pocket, where, much worn and read, it had been constantly carried, even to the moment when the fatal shot was fired.

D. H. F.

TEMPERANCE.

A department edited by BENJAMIN F. WHITSON, of Moylan, Pa., on behalf of the Friends' Temperance Association of Philadelphia.

The outworn "right," the old abuse,
The pious fraud transparent grown,
The Good held captive in the use
Of Wrong alone,—

These wait their doom, from that great law
Which makes the past time serve to-day;
And fresher life the world shall draw
From their decay.

—WHITTIER.

KEEP UP WITH THE WATER WAGON—it is not an ox-cart or a mule team. These are days of motor propulsion. No new power has been found, but improved methods have been discovered for applying the forces that have always. If we believe in social betterment, in progress towards righteousness in civic affairs, in accepting new duties as new occasions teach us new methods of using old forces for good, then it would seem that the very least we may do is to keep informed and informing others as to what is actually transpiring to give encouragement and confidence to all who hope to see our nation, and all other nations also, emancipated from the liquor traffic. With this accomplished, the emancipation of individuals from bondage to the drink habit will be made a thousand times easier.

ELEVEN STATES HAVE RATIFIED the proposed constitutional amendment. Five of these are not prohibition States in the sense of having already outlawed the liquor traffic throughout their own territory. Massachusetts is the latest accession to the list of stars that are flashing out for a saloonless nation. And it seems highly probable now that those who in 1912 predicted "a saloonless nation in 1920" were speaking more truly than they knew, or than most of them had faith to believe would come to pass. The chairman of our Temperance Association remarked at a recent meeting of the Executive Committee, "I am beginning to feel as though we really have arrived at our senior year."

HOW MAY WE HELP THE CAUSE ALONG?—This is a question we wish to answer by a concrete suggestion of how the reader may co-operate with us by doing simple, easy service at home which we cannot do, but which should be done. We want persons in every community of Friends or wherever situated to "go after" the people who do not believe in prohibition; not in any blunt, tactless manner, but in the least offensive manner possible, by simply sending one brief leaflet at a time with or without the name of the sender as may be thought best, to be followed systematically by one more of a different kind, and later by another and another until at least five circulars covering as many weeks have gone right to people you know as needing information. Let us stop wasting breath and postage on people who are "right" on this question and spend at least a nickel on persons we have reason to believe need converting.

We would like to prescribe the literature for this purpose, and, if necessary, we will supply it free of cost. We have in mind a type of leaflets that is new in every way and prepared in accordance with approved methods of psychological advertising. We believe they will be found very effective if used as here suggested, or if used by business men among familiar correspondents.

We want to hear from persons who are interested in this proposition. State in a general way the class of people to be circularized, as laborers, factory people, farmers, professional men, traveling men, or etc., and the number you propose to address or approach personally. Have a place for every leaflet and see that every leaflet goes to its place. If you do not know how people stand on the question of national prohibition, ask them. It is a perfectly proper question to ask. The issue is nation-wide and is before the people now.

STRENGTHEN AMERICA.—The leaflets we recommend have been prepared by Charles Stelzle, Manager of the campaign of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America. Most of this literature is free from features that would make it objectionable to Friends. There may be individuals of us who would not feel easy to use at the present time a leaflet with the above caption, or such a headline as Camouflage, but while every one must exercise his own judgment in these particulars, we believe that to Strengthen America in ways that we can endorse with a clear conscience is consistent, and to use the word camouflage to teach a lesson in sincerity is not doing violence to our testimonies. Every leaflet repeats the slogan, "If you believe that the traffic in alcohol does more harm than good, help stop it." Here is a sample circular. There are more than thirty kinds, each dealing with a different phase of the subject:—

WHY MEN ARE ASKED TO SURRENDER THEIR "PERSONAL LIBERTY."—BY CHARLES STELZLE.—There was a time when men honestly believed they had a right to own slaves—because they thought it was purely a question of property rights. But to-day we know it is also a moral question.

There was a time when men honestly believed that all they needed to do to get a wife was to take a club and hit the woman of their choice on the head and drag her home. But to-day—well, women have something to say about it, too.

There was a time when men honestly believed they had an absolute right to do with their children as they pleased. But to-day we recognize the fact that children have rights of their own.

Slaves, women, children—these have come to their own because a new conception of RIGHTS and DUTIES has dawned upon men. They discovered that there is a more fundamental question than property rights—that DUTY is a bigger word than RIGHTS.

And so the weaker members of society are to-day being given a better chance.

But we still bark back to the "property rights" period and the question of "personal liberty" when we discuss the saloon and the liquor business.

We forget that the bigger thing in this discussion is DUTY and SACRIFICE—for the sake of the weaker members of society—that we should be ready to give up our "rights" when the well-being of mankind as a whole is concerned.

The man who is ready to do this proves that he's a BIG man—the LITTLE man always stands out for his "rights," no matter what happens.

The man who insists that his "personal liberty" gives him the right to drink liquor and support saloons—and that he proposes to exercise this right—is asking thousands of men and women and children to make a greater sacrifice and to suffer infinitely more because the saloon is licensed, than HE would suffer or sacrifice were the saloon to be closed.

If you believe that the traffic in Alcohol does more harm than good—Help Stop It!

LARGE POSTERS, twelve or more different kinds, 22x28 inches in size, have also been prepared by the same individual. Some of these are very impressive. The price is two dollars a dozen. We will furnish a limited number where the opportunity seems to warrant it.

Address all correspondence on these subjects to B. F. Whitson, Moylan, Pa.

OUR LESSONS TOO.

A little child, with lessons all unlearned

And problems still unsolved, before me stands;

With tired, puzzled face to me upturned,

She holds a slate within her outstretched hands:

"My sums are hard—I cannot think to-night;

Dear father, won't you make the answers right?"

Thus do I come to thee, great Master, dear;

My lessons, too, are hard; my brain is weak.

Life's problems still unsolved, the way not clear,

The answers wrong—thy wisdom I would seek.

A tired, puzzled child, I pray to-night:

"Here is my slate—O make the answers right!"

CHILDREN'S CORNER.

TEACHERS IN OTHER LANDS.

One interesting feature of our Yearly Meeting was that we were brought into closer touch with Friends in foreign lands than we often are, through letters from Japan and Australia, telling of their interests; and some of their difficulties in which they asked our sympathy and help. There was also a request made, by a group of our Friends, that the Yearly Meeting should give its care and oversight to the foreign mission work in which its members are interested. And these things lead us to recall the Friends who have been for years working as teachers and missionaries; and to wish that we could all know more of them and of their work.

One who has been lately here visiting her old home and friends is Alice Whittier Jones, Principal of the Girls' Friends' School at Ramallah, Palestine. She has now returned to her work, and just before leaving Philadelphia, gave an "interview," from which some of the following facts are taken. The British forces, now in control of Palestine, she feels, will bring better living conditions to the people, and believes that "perhaps our greatest opportunity is at hand—our work just beginning." The School had to be closed a few months after the great war started, as it was not safe for the girls to be there, with the Turkish troops constantly passing by on the road to Jerusalem. It is pleasant to hear that, though several of the buildings owned by Friends were first occupied by Turkish and then by German officers, no harm was done, and the Germans even mended some holes in the roof!

One question we always want to ask is how people came to choose their life-work, and Alice Jones answers this for us:

"When did I first become interested in Ramallah? When I was a child between eight and ten years old we used to hear a great deal of the work being done there, and I made a quilt for the girls' school—thus taking my first excursion there. It wasn't until years later that I was asked by the Board of Foreign Missions to take a position there, and then I did not accept because I wanted to go to Africa. Why? Just because it seemed to me to be the darkest, blackest place in the whole world—and I felt that was where I must go. Ah, yes, I have learned differently since—that at our very doorsteps may lie fields for service; but then I thought just of the one place—Africa. After working several years teaching the blind I was again offered a position as principal of the Girls' School at Ramallah, and this time I accepted. It suddenly occurred to me that this was my open door—the very place where I might be needed most. I was free to go—few others were more free. And it was my open door."

Even before the days when she made the quilt, Alice Jones must have been watching for the "leading" of the "inward Teacher," for it is told that when she and her brother were little children, walking in the woods near their New England home, they saw a miserable-looking tramp, lying asleep on the leaves under a tree. They passed quietly by, but little Alice wondered if they ought not "to wake him up and talk to him about his sins." Being rather afraid to do this, they kneeled down and prayed for him!

She went to Palestine in the Spring of 1906, and confesses that she was at first disappointed in the country which she has since learned to love so well, and which she says "grew upon me gradually—its far, wide spaces, the clear lights and shadows, the wonder of the hills and the view of the sea over clean, wind-swept hills, until now I miss it so I am homesick for it all. And here I feel so closed in, with the trees all about me. There are few trees there, as you know. They were cut long ago for fuel.

"Ramallah means 'Hill of God,' and the village lies upon one of the hills of Benjamin nearly 3000 feet above the Mediterranean Sea and just thirty-five miles from the coast. Once it was a Mohammedan village and the ruins of an old mosque are there, but for many years past the inhabitants have been Christians belonging to the Greek Church.

"It is in the villages," she goes on to say, "that one meets with the old customs. The cities of Palestine are full of Europeans and modern changes, but the villages are to-day exactly as they were more than two thousand years ago. The customs have not changed since Bible days. The oppression, the poverty and the ignorance have been so great during all these past centuries, however, that one feels that the people are indeed as the blind, and even that they are deaf and also dumb. Very few know how to read and write. The women have no knowledge of housekeeping according to modern ways. Sanitation is unknown. The majority of the families in the villages all live in a house composed of but one room without ventilation. They sleep on mats on the floor and eat with their fingers. They wear the same clothes night and day and carry water from long distances. Dirt, disease, ignorance are broadcast. If it were not for the bright sun of Palestine the people would long since have been wiped off the earth.

NEAR THE HOLY CITY.

"No, they have 30 standards of living such as we have. But this very condition has given to us our opportunity—our great chance. After a Syrian girl has been eight years in our school she understands not only English and Arabic thoroughly and is equipped with a good grammar school education and a knowledge of the Bible and the principles of Christianity, but she knows how to sew, how to clean and how to keep house. She knows and has learned to practice the principles of hygiene—and she is awake to the needs of her people. She will go under our direction into a community where the people know none of these things, and one of our little day schools will be opened for the children. She will teach the little children the modern ways. She will form mothers' clubs and will teach the mothers how to take care of their babies and how to sew and to keep house. And she will tell them the stories from the Bible. They are very eager for all of these things. They love to listen to the Bible stories, and the Bible is much easier to interpret over there, because of so many of the ancient customs being still practiced. Then, too, one grows to understand it better oneself.

"From our school garden we can see Mizpah, where Samuel judged Israel, and Gideon, where Solomon chose wisdom. Bethel is only three miles away, and a short distance south of Jerusalem there is Bethlehem.

"The sky is so clear there most of the time that we grow to love the clouds, we saw them so seldom! And at night I have never seen the constellations larger or more brilliant than they are in Palestine. It is impossible to describe the brilliancy of the stars and the vast wide depths of the heavens we could see from our house-tops with not a spire, not a tree or building to interrupt the vision. Yes, the country has become very dear to me, and the people also.

"One of the beauties of the country, which comes as a surprise, are the marvelous wild flowers, cyclamen, anemone and wild narcissus. So much of the rock is a soft sandstone which the rain has perforated with countless holes, and just after the rainy season the wild flowers spring forth from these rocks on the hills, from stone walls, from the sides of the houses, from everywhere—as if they had been planted in countless thousands. It is most charming. Our girls used to love our wild flower walks.

SYRIAN SCHOOL-GIRLS.

"In our school garden we have every sort of flower. One beautiful walk is lined with hollyhocks planted by Rosa Lee, and we have rock terraces all blooming with wild flowers. In our school grounds we have, too, the only grove of trees in all that region—great pines which were planted long ago when our land was purchased. Some children of Ramallah were once asked where heaven was and they said, 'We know! We have looked in and seen it—it is the garden of the Friends' Girls' School!'

"You can see, if there are some disillusionments, there are also compensations!"

The little Syrian girls enter the Friends' Training School as young as eight years of age. The first "lesson" is a good bath and thorough cleaning of the scalp and hair. The little girl is given into the care of one of the older girls, who acts as her mother throughout the first year, looks after her clothes, sees that her hair is combed, her shoes laced—all that sort of thing. At night she says her prayers with the other girls and goes to sleep in her clean white bed.

The general routine of the school day is as follows: The rising bell rings at six o'clock, when the girls dress, air their beds and after silent prayer, assemble for breakfast, which consists of bread, olives and coffee. After breakfast each girl makes her own bed and goes to the part of the house where her work is assigned for that week. Some girls prepare the school-rooms, others wash dishes, others have charge of the offices, dining-rooms, guest-room, etc., so that by 8:30 the entire school has been cleaned from top to bottom and is in such order that visitors may come at any time. The book-work begins after chapel exercises. About one-third of this is in English and two-thirds Arabic. The Bible lesson each day has an important place; physiology and hygiene and all of the various grammar school studies all have their places, with especial emphasis laid upon those most essential for the students.

• We hope to give other sketches of the work of our teachers in foreign countries. F. T. R.

If the wind be contrary and blow a storm, instead of putting out to sea we must cast anchor to hold the vessel. Our anchor is a firm confidence and hope in God, waiting patiently the calming of the tempest and the return of a more favorable gale, as David "waited patiently for the Lord, and He inclined unto him and heard his cry."—LADY GUION.

THE MOLOKANI OF RUSSIA.

To the Editor of The Friend—

DEAR FRIEND.—The accompanying extracts from a letter from J. Bevan Braithwaite dated sixth of Tenth Month, 1883, referring to an interview the previous Second-day with three Molokani Elders may be of interest to Friends generally. The reason for reserve has now passed away, and it is hoped in the near future Friends may come into direct touch with this interesting people and that more definite information may be obtained of their church organization.

They describe themselves as "Spiritual Christians," the term Molokani (milk drinkers) being apparently a nickname, as "Quakers" is to "Friends." The number of Molokani in 1883 was estimated roughly at about 200,000; more recently the figures have been given as 500,000, and even higher.

Amerkhanian, a few months after the interview, was exiled to Siberia, and his family were allowed to accompany him; as a special privilege he was not in irons. He knew some twenty-four languages, of which he could speak some sixteen; he died in exile.

M. A. Morrison was the British and Foreign Bible Society representative for Southern Russia and had traveled with our party from Odessa.

The book of the Molokani doctrine, etc., published at Geneva, has now been translated.

I remain, thine sincerely,

SOUTLEIA, Oliver's Mount, CHARLES E. GILLETT.
nr. Worcester, Second Month 2, 1918.

[EXTRACTS FROM THE LETTER.]

"The Elders were dressed in the Russian, or Tartar, style, with a long frock with a girdle. Their countenances were beaming with Christian kindness, and one of them, who took the principal part, appeared decidedly intelligent. They had a constant tradition that their Society had originated from the Quakers in England; but they were unacquainted with the particulars. . . . I was the first Friend they had ever seen. They informed me that there are about 1,500 Molokani in Tiflis and about an equal number in the neighbourhood, and about 50,000 in the Caucasus.

"Simeon Matfiervitch seems to have been the first Russian who promulgated their views. He lived under the Empress Catherine (II) in the government of Tamboff, about 110 years ago. On being asked the difference between them and the Russian Church, they answered, 'All visible in the churches; we have left it and all ceremonies.' They have no water baptism, nor any taking of the bread and wine. They believe in the one baptism of the Holy Ghost, necessary to change the heart, and in the spiritual partaking of the Body and Blood of Christ. I questioned them closely upon the Atonement, upon which I was thankful to find them thoroughly sound, referring with earnestness to the passage, 'Having therefore boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Christ'—He is the one sacrifice and high priest; and exclaiming with great seriousness; 'O God, Thou hast bought us through the blood of Thy Son, Jesus.'

"Upon conversing further, they produced a small volume in MS., beautifully written, of which they said they had only one copy, not being allowed by the Government to print anything. It was in the old Slavonic; and my friend Amerchanyantz found some difficulty in making out some of the words. It contains an account of their Church order, their arrangements as to marriage, and a confession of faith presented to the Emperor Alexander Paulovitch I. in 1805. . . .

The second article was headed, 'Who is the Priest?' The scope of it is to disclaim every other priesthood under the Christian dispensation but the Lord Jesus Christ, our one Sacrifice, Mediator and High Priest. Amerchanyantz was proceeding with the verbal translation when they offered to lend him the volume that he might make a careful translation for me."

*This was done and several copies made, but all trace of them is at present lost.

"Amerchanyantz says they refuse both to swear and to fight, but as to the latter, he is not quite sure whether there has not been some relaxation under the constraint of the Government in recent years."

[Further questions related to the education of their children; this appeared to be carried out in the individual homes.]

"The interview concluded with a sweet religious opportunity, and in much love. M. A. Morrison tells me that the Molokani are great purchasers and readers of the Holy Scripture, and both he and Amerchanyantz describe them as generally quiet, serious, well-disposed persons—not always appearing equally spiritually-minded. . . . The Caucasus is only one of several districts in that vast Empire in which the Molokani are scattered."—From The Friend (London).

NEWS ITEMS.

NOTES FROM JAPAN.—(SUCCESSFULLY SELFISH.)—Asakusa temple is large, and leading up to it is a long paved street lined with little shops. It was just before the dolls' festival when I visited it and toys of all sorts were displayed. We walked slowly up to the temple under a beautiful red gate, with tiled roof and gilded dragons, by women selling beans for pigeons which were flying about, and passed one little booth where the worshippers washed their hands before prayer. In the temple lanterns were lighted before ugly images. A large box, with slats across the top, stood ready for the money. I saw one poor woman with a baby on her back throw in her coins and clapping her hands bow her head in prayer. Side by side, business men and hard-worked mothers pray. My companion said, "They both pray for material gain. Their wishes are all selfish, for they have no vision beyond. It must seem very strange to you."

We walked on to the amusement section behind the temple, where in moving picture shows, vaudeville and worse forms of diversion men forget their cares and trouble. Through the whole park around the temple I recognized much that had been taken from our western civilization. The whole place seemed a money-making proposition. It was "successfully selfish." We in the west have so much that is good and pure to give. Can we not make the Christian church successfully useful? If only through the very unselfishness of its organization and its members it could show the way of love to others.

ESTHER B. RHOADS.

THE Friends' Girls' School held its twenty-fifth Commencement on Third Month 27, 1918. There were nine graduates. The prospect is good for a full entering class. The second Yearly Meeting of Friends of Japan was held in Mito, Fourth Month 12th to 14th. The meeting of Ministers and Elders was held the evening of the 11th.

Esther B. Rhoads has been appointed to assist in the School for the year 1918-1919. She will have charge of the girls' dormitory.

Alice G. Lewis will take her year of furlough this year. She expects to sail on the Nippon Maru, Seventh Month 11th.

EDITH NEWLIN, a member of Bear Creek Monthly Meeting, Farham, Iowa, has been appointed to go to Japan to assist in the work of the Friends' Mission. She is a graduate of Penn College, 1915, and since that time has been teaching at Barnesville, Ohio. She will sail with Gilbert and Minnie P. Bowles sometime in Eighth Month.

Alice Lewis writes, "Japan has such an overwhelming need for Christ that sometimes I feel almost crushed with it all; but I am glad to remember that 'I am not bound to make the world right,' only to do the part of the task that the Master has laid out for me. 'Not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts.' May you and we have no other purpose in our work but to reveal Jesus Christ, as the Saviour from sin."

THE following appreciation is from a recent issue of the Congregationalist.

Friends have always been intensely loyal and have shown in many ways in time of war their willingness to go the utmost of sacrifice for the country even if they could not do it in just the manner the country demanded. Now as in former times they are not slackers. Their activities in the present war include hospital and Red Cross service, ambulance work, rebuilding ruined districts. They also have a committee for the purpose of raising a fund of $500,000 for after-war reconstruction in France and Belgium. When it is remembered that the membership of the body is so small this is a good sum for it to undertake.

Friends have rapidly moved from their comparative isolation to a disposition to take an active part in the ongoing of the Kingdom of God. In proportion to their numbers they have already made a great contribution in ideals. Perhaps the world war will bring them out into the main stream.

THE Gospel Herald (the official organ of the Mennonites—published at Scottsdale, Pa.) in its issue of Fourth Month 4th speaks as follows:—

The position of the Mennonite Church has been very much misunderstood since the "Selective Service Act" has become law, and members of our Church have been inducted into military service. The fact that members of the Mennonite Church find themselves unable to co-operate with our government in a military program, on account of their faith; and the further fact that the body of our people are largely of German extraction, has given rise to the belief that we are "pro-German," "slackers," etc.

That we should be misunderstood because we sincerely and consistently seek to maintain our testimony on the doctrine of non-resistance, in time of war, is not more than must be expected.

We freely confess that our faith in this doctrine of non-resistance as it applies to war is an occasion very often for a misunderstanding of our motives and acts. Yet we do not hesitate to faithfully teach these principles and advise the course of action our brethren should follow as faithful disciples of Christ and members of His Church.

The position of the Mennonite Church as defined at the last General Conference, on the war question, is briefly stated as follows: "Our attitude on the question of military service is correctly stated in that clause of the Selective Draft Law enacted May 18, 1917, which provides for members of every church whose existing creed or principles forbid its members to participate in war in any form and whose religious convictions are against war or participation therein.

"This position has been uniformly held by our forefathers from Reformation times, and their loyalty and devotion to their faith is attested by their suffering, even to the extent of martyrdom and banishment by those governments enjoining military service upon their citizens." We teach that "even laws which may seem unwise and unjust should be submitted to uncomplainingly and no thought should be entertained of doing anything but comply with all that they ask of us—unless they prescribe conditions contrary to the Gospel; in which case we should meekly but faithfully stand true to the principles of the Gospel, even if the consequences entail suffering. As a Christian people we have always endeavored to support the government under which we lived in every capacity consistent with the teaching of the Gospel as we understand it, and will continue to do so; but according to this teaching we cannot participate in war in any form; that is, to aid or abet war, whether in a combant or non-combant capacity. We are conscious of what this attitude, under existing circumstances, may mean. No one who really understands our position will accuse us of either disloyalty or cowardice, for our record has proven our submissiveness to the powers that be, and to maintain our position under present conditions requires greater courage than to accept non-combant service. But, believing as we do, that any form of service under the military arm of the government means responsibility, either directly or indirectly, for the taking of human life and other destructive acts of war, we cannot consistently do otherwise than hold aloof from every form of military service. Our people have at all times refrained from voluntary enlistment for service in any form under previous military laws, and for us now to accept service under the military arm of the government, would be equivalent to a denial of the faith and principles which we have held as vital to our spiritual well-being and eternal salvation."

As a Committee we have therefore urged upon all of our people to comply with the regulations of the government with reference to registration and reporting at camp when called, and only advised that they do not accept service in which said service they would violate their church creed.

As we as a people will cheerfully render any service for the Government we can, that is consistent with our faith, but should the government see proper to assign our members to any service under the military establishment, we could no longer advise obedience to such rulings, but to be consistent with the principles of our faith and doctrine we will have to advise them to be amenable to any penalty the government may see proper to inflict as a punishment for taking such attitude, rather than serve under the military establishment.

We have always been a quiet, peace-loving, and law-abiding people, desiring to pursue only such occupation as will enable us to consistently carry out the principles of our faith in uplifting humanity in accordance with the teachings of our Saviour. We are confident that our government would not wish to arbitrarily force upon us such service as would partake of the nature of religious persecution.

Trusting that all rulings made in this matter that in any way will affect our faith will be such that we can yield hearty support thereto, we subscribe ourselves,

The Committee,

AARON LOUCKS,
S. G. SMETLER,
D. D. MILLER.

FRIENDS' SERVICE NOTES.—We have word from Boston that over $2,200 has been collected as a result of Henry Scattergood's large meeting in the Hub-city.

The Civil Affairs Department of the Red Cross has changed its headquarters from 4 Place de la Concorde to 12 Rue Boissy d'Anglas, Paris. Charles Evans has been given large and commodious offices at this new address.

We have word from the postal authorities that no packages can be sent to members of the American Expeditionary Forces, except upon specific requests from France. Some time ago we made the arrangement whereby mail could be sent to our men addressed A. E. F. and those who may have been using this address should note the above order. The address which has proved most satisfactory is the following:

Mission de la Société des Amis,
53 Rue de Rivoli,
Paris, France.

We have had inquiries as to whether we will send out the gold-named Friends' Service Pins and Buttons upon credit. We are very glad to do so when requested. Wherever possible money should be remitted with an order to simplify bookkeeping, but it is entirely possible for the price to be collected and remitted after receipt of the emblems.

At the time of sending in copy for our department, no news has come from our Paris office during the past week. News from our workers who were in the Somme and Aisne has been so scarce that Friends may be interested in this brief extract from a postal from D. Owen Stephens:—

"After three full days of evacuation I am in Paris. The shells kept falling nearer and the rumors kept getting more and more exciting. We walked thirteen miles the first day and fourteen the next, with five hours sleep between, pushing wheelbarrows for refugees most of the way. Then slept out in the woods, and the third day took a train to Paris, only a few of our people being of any use with the peasants longer."

FRIENDS COURT-MARTIALED.—In course of his defence before the D. C. M. at Tidworth on the 5th inst., Philip Radley (Bristol P. M.) said:

"In appearing before you for my fourth court-martial on practically the same charge, I must again insist that under the provisions of the Military Service Acts I ought not to be in the army at all. . . . If our duty to God clashes with our duty to the State, the latter claim must be put aside. But I contend that the true interest of the State can never be antagonistic to the claims of God. The present world order is entirely opposed to all the spirit of Christ's teaching. He said: 'A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another.' His teaching was against all war, no matter what the circumstances; He made no distinctions. To me it does not mean such questions as what I should do if the Germans came and the like, but it is a question of whether I will help to fasten conscription, military and industrial, with all the evils that they engender, on the world. For this reason also I cannot undertake any alternative to military service in any form. To me there is no alternative between the trenches and the absolute position which I have taken up, and I have already stated why I cannot undertake military service."

[Sentenced to two years' H. L. and taken to Winchester C. P. 1918.—Previous courts-martial at Newhaven (two), and Larkhill Camp, Salisbury Plain.—The Friend (London).

WESTTOWN OLD SCHOLARS' ASSOCIATION.—(Lost Addresses).—The Registrar recently announced through the columns of The Westonian a list of names of old scholars, concerning whom he has failed to secure information by mail. It is difficult to keep our records accurate in view of deaths and changes of address, and the following list is presented to the readers of THE FRIEND with the request that any information they may possess be sent to James G. Vail, Registrar, 121 S. Third Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Name	Registration Number	Entered From	Date of Entry	Last Known Address
William Beans, Jr.	136	Edgewood, Pa.	1808	140 West End Ave., Trenton, N. J.
Georgia F. Boyce	629	Belvidere, N. C.	1904	917½ Valencia Ave., Los Angeles, Cal.
Martha W. Bishop	573	Winchester, Va.	1865	2150 N. Fourth Street, Harrisburg, Pa.
William J. Carter	20	Carden City, Kan.	1885	636 N. Center St., Reno, Nev.
L. Robert Coates	250	Baltimore, Md.	1871	Knights Building, Baltimore, Md.
Amos M. Cook	401	Glenville, Md.	1884	Royersford, Pa.
Marian B. Cooper	809	Wilmington, Del.	1851	3620 Washington Ave., St. Louis, Mo.
Amy A. Cope	764	Adena, O.	1897	Dillonvale, O.
Robert F. Crosbie	294	Paulina, Ia.	1802	Twining, Alberta, Canada.
Henry Evans	173	Marlton, N. J.	1869	224 State St., Camden, N. J.
Anna J. Fairbairn	959	Philadelphia, Pa.	1892	213 Pacific Ave., Atlantic City, N. J.
Percy Hadley	559	Columbus, Ind.	1904	Columbus, Ind.
William T. Hatton	829	Wilmington, Del.	1881	R. F. D., No. 1, Coatesville, Pa.
Lydia W. Hollowok	697	Chatham, Pa.	1856	436 Sterling Place, Brooklyn, N. Y.
David T. Hollowell	554	Greensboro, N. C.	1904	6 Gilbre's Court, Columbia, S. C.
Crete P. Hutchinson	498	Washington, D. C.	1900	Hauptmann Court, San Francisco, Cal.
J. Anderson Johnson	459	Nicholson's Mills, N. C.	1880	R. F. D., No. 2, Greeley, Col.
S. Bolton Leeds	716	Spread Eagle, Pa.	1881	New Barn, Longfield, Eng.
Anna T. Matthews	152	Monkton, Md.	1864	Philopost, Md.
Josephine M. Mauney	145	Bush Hill, N. C.	1866	565 Ponce de Leon Ave., Atlanta, Ga.
Warren P. Mirehner	30	Pasadena, Cal.	1887	Ocean Park, Cal.
Naomi C. Morris	261	Richmond, Ind.	1883	851 N. Drake Ave., Chicago, Ill.
Josephine C. Newbold	25	Cap, Pa.	1863	3510 Arch St., Phila., Pa.
Mary Ella Ogden	360	Kingsessing, Pa.	1869	Lansdowne, Pa.
John W. Patterson	506	Philadelphia, Pa.	1876	3272 Twenty-first St., San Francisco, Cal.
Catherine M. Phillips	380	Ward, Pa.	1896	307 Market St., Chester, Pa.
Rebecca N. C. Reeve	113	Philadelphia, Pa.	1888	Williamsburg, Va.
Martha S. Reynolds	971	Bush Hill, N. C.	1883	Glenwood, N. C.
J. Walter Smith	614	Lincoln, Va.	1878	Mabrev, N. C.
Lelia M. Smith	305	Eaglestown, N. C.	1893	Eaglestown, N. C.
Chester W. Spencer	782	Emporia, Kan.	1910	Emporia, Kan.
Mary E. Stanyon	642	Village Green, Pa.	1875	26 S. Forty-eighth St., Phila., Pa.
Marianna H. Stark	952	Bloomingsdale, Ind.	1862	Rockville, Md.
Ernest L. Symmes	69	New York City, N. Y.	1889	286 Fifth Ave., New York City.
Arnita Underhill Taylor	683	New York City, N. Y.	1905	5107 Baltimore Ave., Phila., Pa.
Arthur Tow	673	Norway, Ia.	1907	Norway, Ia.
Florence J. Vance	550	Cincinnati, O.	1901	94 Elleron Ave., Price Hill, Cincinnati, O.
Lydia H. Wood	905	Philadelphia, Pa.	1860	West Chester, Pa.
William J. Wood	122	Poughkeepsie, N. Y.	1869	Kansas City, Mo.

REPORT OF THE AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE FOR WEEK ENDING FOURTH MONTH 27, 1918.

Received from 26 Meetings.....	$3,640.09
Received from 7 Individuals.....	220.00
Received for Armenian and Syrian Relief.....	140.38
Received for Russian Work.....	520.00
Received for Supplies.....	41.75
	$4,562.22

CHARLES F. JENKINS, Treasurer.

A cordial invitation is extended to the Spring meeting of the Friends' Educational Association, at Friends' Select School, Philadelphia, Seventh-day, Fifth Month 4th:—

Afternoon Session—3.30 P. M.:

Business Meeting—election of officers.

PROGRAM:—"Teaching To-day for Peace To-morrow." Alfred C. Garrett for the younger children; George A. Walton for children of higher grades; Samuel H. Brown for children of the high school.

Discussion.

Supper at 6 P. M.

Evening Session—7.15 P. M.

"The Teacher and the New Social Order."—Professor Elbert Russell. Notices for this meeting have been mailed. In case any one does not receive his notice, and desires to be present at supper, he is requested to inform Caroline Nicholson, Westtown, Pa., before Fifth Month 1st.

WANTED IMMEDIATELY.—Six more trained nurses for our hospital at Soubisey, Meurthe, France. The work of this hospital is rapidly growing, owing to the severe distress of a civilian population who are subject to unusual health-destroying conditions, at a time when the usual medical and hospital care is not available. Both graduate nurses and those with practical experience in nursing are needed. Send applications to Rebecca Carter, Secretary, Women's Work, 20 S. Twelfth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

The Meetings for Worship, both on First and Fifth-days, during the Winter months have been held at the home of John B. Confort, Columbus, N. J., will on and after Fifth Month 5th be resumed at the meeting-house at Mansfield as usual.

The Associated Executive Committee of Friends on Indian Affairs is likely to need in the near future Friends to take charge of certain stations in the Oklahoma mission field. Administrative ability, as well as a gift in public ministry, is needful, and above all a heart-felt desire to serve this needy field. Interested Friends addressing the Committee on this subject should give the names of several representative Friends acquainted with their ability and past activities.

Address Edward M. Westar, Chairman, Provident Building, Philadelphia, Pa.

MEETINGS FROM FIFTH MONTH 5th TO FIFTH MONTH 11th:—

Philadelphia Quarterly Meeting, at Fourth and Arch Streets, Third-day, Fifth Month 7, at 10.30 A. M.

Abington Quarterly Meeting, at Germantown, Fifth-day, Fifth Month 9, at 3.30 P. M.

Kennett Monthly Meeting, at Kennett Square, Fourth-day, Fifth Month 7, at 10 A. M.

Chesterfield, at Trenton, Third-day, Fifth Month 7, at 10 A. M.

Chester, N. J., at Moonstown, Third-day, Fifth Month 7, at 7.30 P. M.

Bradford, at Coatesville, Fourth-day, Fifth Month 8, at 10 A. M.

New Garden, at West Grove, Fourth-day, Fifth Month 8, at 10 A. M.

Upper Springfield, at Mansfield, Fourth-day, Fifth Month 8, at 10 A. M.

Haddonfield, Fourth-day, Fifth Month 8, at 7.30 P. M.

Wilmington, Fifth-day, Fifth Month 9, at 7.30 P. M.

Urbidun, at Downingtown, Fifth-day, Fifth Month 9, at 10.30 A. M.

London Grove, Fifth-day, Fifth Month 9, at 10 A. M.

Falls, at Fallsburg, Fifth-day, Fifth Month 9, at 7.30 P. M.

Evesham, at Mt. Laurel, Fifth-day, Fifth Month 9, at 10 A. M.

Upper Evesham, at Medford, Seventh-day, Fifth Month 11, at 10 A. M.

Is Your Life Insurance Adequate?

You will need more than $9000 to guarantee to your family a monthly income of fifty dollars for twenty years.

Write for information.

The Provident Life and Trust Co.
Of Philadelphia, Pa.
N. W. Cor. Fourth and Chestnut Sts.

H. F. BRUNER S. D. HALL

H. F. BRUNER & Co.
COAL

OFFICE AND YARD

16 N. TWENTY-FIRST STREET
PHILADELPHIA

TELEPHONES: LOCUST 243
RACB 661

A COMPLETE LINE
OF

NURSERY STOCK

FRUIT TREES,
ORNAMENTAL TREES,
SHRUBS,
SMALL FRUITS,
ROSES,
CLEMATIS,
HEDGE PLANTS.

The Rakestraw-Pyle Company
KENNETT SQUARE, PA.

GLASLYN-CHATHAM

PARK PLACE

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

A Family House of Established Reputation.
Open Throughout the Year.

NATHAN L. JONES.

Pocono Manor Winter Inn
POCONO MANOR, PA.

SPRINGTIME in the Pocono Mountains is ever a delight to those who admire and study nature. The Birds and Flowers are numerous and varied, and the Trout Fishing in the Swiftwater is wonderful.

J. W. HURLEY, Manager
(Pocono Summit Station, D. L. & W. R. R.)

Woolman School

A Friends' School for Social and Religious Education.

Six Weeks Summer Term:
Seventh Month 1—Eighth Month 10, 1918.

For Information, Apply to
ELBERT RUSSELL, Director,
WOOLMAN SCHOOL
SWARTHMORE, PA.

W. B. WEAVER
UNDERTAKER and EMBALMER

550-552 N. 5th St., PHILA., PA.

Special Attention Given to Funerals
In and Out of the City. Also Chapel
Accommodations for Funerals.

BELL 'PHONE : ESTABLISHED 1880

To enjoy good health and a sound digestion use
PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT BREAD
made from the entire wheat grain ground on a stone mill. A perfect food and natural regulator. Sold by all good grocers in Philadelphia.

Write for particulars to

PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT CO.
10th & Susquehanna Aves., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

WALL PAPERS—All Grades

Custom of Friends Specially Solicited

FRANK C. BUEHL

SUCCESSOR TO S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON
902 SPRING GARDEN ST., PHILADELPHIA
Store open until 10.30 A. M. Any other time by appointment only
Opposite Spring Garden Station, Phila., & Reading R.R.
ESTABLISHED 1849. BELL 'PHONE.

"FRIENDS AND THE INDIANS"

FOR SALE AT $1.50 BY

FRIENDS' BOOK STORE
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

To ADVERTISERS.—THE FRIEND is now open for selected advertisements at the following rates: One inch, 50 cents, of 4 cents a line; no insertion for less than 25 cents. Long term rates given on application.

Friends having real estate to rent or sell, also those desiring board or rooms, should find THE FRIEND an excellent medium for reaching interested parties.

Standing business cards are also solicited.

BUSINESS men who are looking for a new printing connection are invited to get acquainted with

THE HOLMES PRESS
J. Lind Esq. Prop.
1336 Cherry Street, Philadelphia

JOSEPH G. FOGG
FUNERAL DIRECTOR and EMBALMER
S. W. Cor. Sixteenth and Race Streets
Special attention given to Friends' Funerals
Bell 'Phone 11 Spruce 1646

SHETLAND PONIES

Oldest Herd in United States
Established 1883

Specialty attractive prices just now owing to change in business arrangements

HARTZELL BROS., - SEBRING, OHIO
Importers and Breeders

CAMP OWAISSA For Girls,

A modest-priced camp on Naomi Lake in the Poconos; central building-hall with fire place and dining porch; all tents have raised floors, facing lake; swimming, basket-ball, horse-back riding, over-night hikes, etc.; Red Cross work; limited to thirty-five girls; counsellors all Friends.

EVALYN M. PAXSON,
No. 2414 Bryn Mawr Ave., Philada.

A FEW SUMMER BOARDERS CAN BE ACCOMMODATED at our farm; rates reasonable. Apply

SEE E. SHARPLESS, London Grove,
West Grove 164, R. 5, Chester County, Pa.

FOR RENT, FURNISHED, FOR THREE MONTHS.
Reasonable terms; 12 rooms, roomy lawn, old shade, garage, garden. Bala Station.
E. M. Paxson, 2414 Bryn Mawr Ave., Phila.

FOR RENT—EIGHT-ROOM FURNISHED Cottage, bath, open plumbing, hot and cold water, town and spring water.—Several meals daily, half hour ferry service to Newport and Narragansett Pier. Excellent opportunity where there are one or more invalids in family. Meals must be taken at Marwotton.
Apply DR. W. LINCOLN BATES,
Jamastown, R. I.

FRIENDS' SCHOOL, AT ATLANTIC CITY, N. J. will need three experienced teachers for year 1918-19 for Seventh and Eighth grades, Fourth and Fifth grades, and Kindergarten. Apply to Principal, HELEN L. FORSYTHE.

WANTED—A POSITION AS GOVERNESS AND mother's helper in a family of refinement.
Address V. "The Friend," 207 Walnut Place, Phila., Pa.

WANTED—A COMPANION FOR A WOMAN Friend, in a suburban town.
Address "Z"—"The Friend."

RESIDENCE: 254 S. 44th St. BELL 'PHONE: Baring 2084X
WILLIAM OAKES
Plumbing and Heating Contractor
ALSO LEAD BURNING
260 SOUTH TENTH STREET
PHILADELPHIA
BELL 'PHONE: Filbert 2666.

ALBERT C. RIDLEY
1714 SANSOM STREET
Engraving and Printing
FINE BUSINESS STATIONERY
Wedding Invitations, Colling Cards, Greeting Cards, Die Stamped Writing Paper
TELEPHONE—LOCUST 1782

M. GATCHEL
126 N. 21st St., PHILA.
MILLINERY, PLAIN AND FANCY
'Phone, Spruce 3632

Belt Satisfaction

A MICHIGAN corporation is well pleased with the 38-inch 3-ply Rhoads Belt shown above. They also have a 20-inch double that has been pronounced by several men the straightest running belt they ever saw.

You can save stops and reduce your belt trouble by using Rhoads Tannate Lace Leather. Such stops cost more than the lace. Tannate outlasts rawhide from two to five times.

J. E. RHODS & SONS
PHILADELPHIA: 12 N. THIRD ST.
NEW YORK: 102 BEKMAN ST.
CHICAGO: 322 W. RANDOLPH ST.
BALTIMORE AGENCY: 37 S. CHARLES ST.
FACTORY AND TANNERY, WILMINGTON, DEL.

SEE WALKER & KEPLER
FOR

Good Electrical Work

531 CHESNUT ST. - PHILA.

Philadelphia's
Representative Store

ELKINS, MORRIS & CO.
BANKERS
REPRESENTATIVES
PAUL W. BROWN
JAMES P. MAGILL
LAND TITLE BUILDING
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

RAILROAD AND PUBLIC UTILITY BONDS
FOR
CONSERVATIVE INVESTMENT.
FULL PARTICULARS ON REQUEST.

We recommend the use of RAG FEATHERWEIGHT

(Antique Finish)

As the paper for high-grade Books and other Publications

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE MATERIAL THAT WE SELL

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY
MANUFACTURERS
PHILADELPHIA

ALFRED C. HAINES
Building Glass and Paints
56 N. Front St., Philadelphia.

R. C. Ballinger Ernest R. Yarnall John A. Stratton
TELEPHONES
Ball—Spruce 17-81 - - Keystone—Race 637
R. C. BALLINGER & CO.
CONTRACTORS and BUILDERS
218 N. Thirteenth St. Philadelphia.

Letchworth Cottage Spring Lake Beach, N. J.

Open for the Season 1918

A. C. & S. H. Letchworth

Established 1870 Both Phones
Frank W. Taylor & Son
Roofers in Tin, Tile, Slate,
Copper and Slug,
Manufacturers of Ranges
and Furnaces

FURNACES, RANGES A HOT WATER SYSTEMS
installed and cared for by expert mechanics
259 S. FOURTH ST., PHILADELPHIA

Genealogist

Elizabeth B. Satterthwaite
42 E. Hookton St., Trumbo, N. J.

Friends Arch St. Centre

304 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Provides comfortable accommodations for guests by the day or week. Meals at moderate prices.

AMELIA D. FEATHERSTONE, Matron.
PHONE—MARETT 1571.

THE following timely books recommended by the Social Order Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, are for sale at Friends' Book Store, No. 304 Arch Street, Philadelphia.

"The Track of the Storm," 111 pp. M. B. Crook,55
"The Practice of Christianity,"	$2.00
"The Church and the Hour," Vida D. Scudder,	1.00
"The Social Problems," C. A. Ellwood,	1.25
"The Abolition of Poverty,"75
"Christianizing the Social Order," J. H. Hollander,	1.50
"The Arm of God,"75
"The Day of Our Visitation," William Littleboy,50
"A Word of Remembrance and Caution to the Rich," John Woolman,05

WM. H. PILE'S SONS

BOOK AND JOB PRINTING

422 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO THE
PRINTING OF BOOKS AND CATALOGS

HARRY S. LEE
313 WALNUT STREET
PAINTER AND GRAINER

ANTIQUE and OFFICE FURNITURE RESTORED
JOBGING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO ESTIMATES

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 91.

FIFTH-DAY, FIFTH MONTH 9, 1918.

No. 45.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price $2.00 a year in Advance.

Publisher, DAVIS H. FORSYTHE.

Editors { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
 DAVIS H. FORSYTHE,
 MARY WARD.

Make remittances payable to

THE FRIEND,

No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

"BEFORE THEY CALL."

On the ground that "the root of prophecy is revelation," and this by no means restricted to forecasts, it cannot be difficult for one who believes in continued direct revelation to see the prophetic aspect of prayer, in the deepest sense of that experience; in other words, to understand that we may be, and that we need to be, divinely instructed as to what we should pray for, so as at least to be kept within the liberty allowed. If, through the Spirit that helpeth our infirmity, intercession is made according to the will of God, this truly is "not an overcoming of God's reluctance, but a laying hold of God's willingness." And this willingness is revealed in the exhortation and promise—pointing to both prayer and answer—"Draw nigh unto God, and He will draw nigh unto you."

In the sixty-fifth chapter of the book of Isaiah we find this remarkable announcement, concerning the people of the new Jerusalem: "And it shall come to pass that, before they call, I will answer; and while they are yet speaking, I will hear." The thought of the answer as being antecedent to the call is one of peculiar significance. It is true that the word "answer" is variously employed in ancient speech, but a little examination leads to the conclusion that, as used in this text, it may be taken in a simple and naturally related sense. Surely there is comfort in the thought that a beneficent Providence, whose superintendence comprehends small things as well as great, and individual as well as general, has been preparing the answer before (and none can say how long before) the petition has been raised in the heart, or spoken from the lips. How often, as we review our own lives, we are made gratefully sensible that a wise and loving Hand has been shaping and guarding them all along, guiding our steps even when we knew it not;

"That more and more a Providence
Of love is understood,
Making the streams of time and sense
Sweet with eternal good!"

Also, in the light of experience, that which may at one time have been an affliction and appeared a calamity may come to be seen as a part of the gracious answer of the Father, when we have called to Him "out of the depths."

"And while they are yet speaking, I will hear." Let us be assured of this, even though we may have to wait for its full revelation. It may be answer enough at times to have our confidence maintained, and to be compassed with a sense of the Divine presence and regard. Moreover, we know that the value of prayer is not wholly in the "answer," objectively considered, but in its spiritual reaction as well; and prayer, in its full sense, is more than specific petitioning. The reverent harkening for the "Inward Voice," the loving conformity and devotion of the heart, the offering of a grateful spirit,—are not all these parts of that exercise in which we are enjoined to continue steadfastly?

A Friend who was deeply experienced in spiritual things has left the observation that "prayer and its answer are inseparable," and that "God Himself is the answer to prayer." When we recall that ancient counsel, "Seek the Lord and His strength; seek His face evermore," we may see an application of the thoughts just quoted; yet again, it is our help to remember that the Lord deals with His children according to their needs, condescending to their various states; and that in this very day "His divine apprehension" will respond in some manner when, in the midst of the storm, there comes the cry,—"Master, carest thou not that we perish?"

M. W.

A PRAYER AT THE CLOSE OF A FIRST-DAY MORNING MEETING FOR WORSHIP.

Bless Thou the word Thou hast by Thy servants spoken,
Bless Thou the bread which Thine own hand hath broken.
Thyself the Eternal Word, our hearts to Thee replying,
Thyself the living Bread, our hunger satisfying.
Thou art the Way, though oft our footsteps falter;
Thou art the Truth, though oft with doubts we palter;
Thou art the Life; make Thou our hearts Thine altar!

The above was written about a year ago on returning home from a First-day morning meeting, in expression of the thoughts in my mind as the result of the messages there given. Recently it was spoken in prayer at the close of a meeting.

—A FRIEND.

AN OREGON TRAIL.

EDITORIAL TRAVEL-NOTES.

"The Oregon Trail" is now largely a matter of tradition, romance and history. It was in 1846 that Francis Parkman had the adventures on the trail recorded in his initial literary effort. It is doubtful whether any of the later work of this able and prolific writer brought him greater distinction than this volume. This is no reflection upon his quality as a historian, for the charm of this volume of adventure comes largely from the conviction that it reveals history in the making. The pioneer spirit that led the great caravans of settlers through untold hardships out upon the Overland and Oregon trails made the empire of the West. One must have some understanding of this spirit if he intends to follow subsequent events of American history in their varied relationships. Parkman's principal service as a historian is in disclosing an important chapter of the philosophy that has made our nation. His "Oregon Trail" is still good reading. As a guide-book of the trail (called now by the Union Pacific Railroad "The Steel Boulevard to Oregon") it has little value. It does not carry one into Oregon at all, but concludes in Colorado. Its power to quicken the imagination, however, and to help the modern traveler to see the untamed Indian and the multitudinous life of bear and buffalo and deer has rarely been rivaled. We can not join in the lament it contains for the past. The spirit of adventure can readily be transmuted into the spirit of enterprise. It is both interesting and thrilling to see the howling wilderness transformed into waving fields of alfalfa by irrigation, to reflect upon the relative value of countless buffalo, and multiplied folds of cattle and sheep which have taken their place, to contrast the picturesque tepees and moving villages of the Indians, with the inviting homesteads of industry and thrift and affection seen at every hand. The romance of wilderness and savagery surely has a worthy competitor in the romance of civilization in its irresistible progress. We may all feel in measure the lure of a wild nature, to some degree we may be justified in yielding to it, but we are unfortunate if we can not respond to the interest and romance of man's triumph over this wilderness and his transformation of the desert into the rose. From such a standpoint these notes are written. The Oregon trail which it is attempted to picture is resounding in memory and imagination with the triumphant shout of a host of conquerors in agriculture, industry, commerce, in home-making, school building and church development.

Having this point of view in mind and looking out to the west over a "steel boulevard" and not an Indian or buffalo trail, it seems fitting to take the initial stage from Philadelphia to Chicago by the Pennsylvania Limited. The two companions of travel were accustomed thirty-five years before as Haverford students to let an afternoon walk include a view of the "Limited" as it sped toward the city. They reminded each other of this as from the rear platform of the train (the observation car has been omitted as a war economy measure) they recognized the deep cut that marks the approach to Bryn Mawr. Directly their handkerchiefs were waving in response to a farewell salute of a little lad of five who was saluting from the platform. For nearly a mile the waving streamer could be seen and it made a picture of the "burning home fires" that tenderly moved others on the train besides the two immediately concerned in it. Though railway travel is said to be safer than home-staying, one cannot look forward to a transcendent trip without some sense of the vicissitudes of human affairs. The exclamation of a great writer, "In every parting there is an image of death," may be unwelcome in memory at such times, but the thought that it contains can not wholly be put aside.

The "Limited" out of Philadelphia is timed so as to give the traveler daylight views of the mountains of Pennsylvania. One must be very blasé indeed not to react with enthusiasm to the "Horse Shoe Curve," and the quiet beauty of the Alleghenies. Many of the charms of the Jura are thus to be discovered near at home! The bulk of the eight hundred miles between Philadelphia and Chicago, however, are rolled off as one sleeps, and this is very well, as the scenery is mostly commonplace. In Chicago one feels a stir of life quite different from the East, but twenty-five years ago that difference was much more marked. The spirit of "hustle" now centres, further west, if indeed it has a centre anywhere. Much of the stability of Philadelphia and New York is manifested all the way across the continent.

Transcontinental passengers in Chicago have a choice between morning and night trains. Our decision was for the latter, so we had a day in the windy city, which did not belie its reputation in that respect. The Field Museum, The Marshall Field Restaurant, the one we patronized, exclusively for men, The Art Gallery, and some business absorbed the bulk of the day. Then, after four o'clock, we were with G. Herbert White in his large manufacturing establishment, listening to most interesting explanations of X-ray apparatus. This truly is a world of marvelously unfolding mystery!

Had there been nothing else to record than these items of interest we should have felt our twelve hours' sojourn in Chicago quite memorable. Our friend, however, carried us off to his beautiful home near Oak Park, where we were welcomed with a warmth of hospitality that made us forget entirely our tired muscles and exhausted minds. As we were later taken down the boulevard to town after supper in our kind host's automobile, our vision of Chicago had changed from that of driving business and congested trade to the beauty and sacredness of home. So long as this transformation takes place in our busy American life we are not struggling against sordid tendencies in vain!

The Oregon Limited out of Chicago accommodates travel by the Union Pacific to Portland, to San Francisco, and to Los Angeles. Our quarters would require no change for three full days, so we settled into them with a comfortable sense of possession. For fifty years the Union Pacific has been perfecting its facilities till now they represent a very full measure not only of the necessities, but also of the luxuries of travel. The speeding train unfolds the productive fields, the rich river bottoms, the grim desert, and the brooding mountains as a great moving picture. When the show is over, certain general impressions persist. These may be far from accurate and in common with all human generalizations are subject to constant revision in the mind of the traveler.

The Valley of the Mississippi is crossed as we sleep. Morning finds us pursuing the course of the Missouri. This valley is then succeeded by that of the Platte, the Green, the Bear, the Snake and other small streams, until the Umatilla carries us into the valley of the famous Columbia. So the water-courses on the Union Pacific as on other routes, have actually cut the trails across the continent. In passing, the train discloses somewhat of the great fertility of Iowa, of the seemingly boundless cattle ranges of Nebraska and Wyoming, of the great possibilities of irrigation in both of these states, of the mineral wealth of Idaho and of the unusual opportunities for fruit growing in Oregon. The ten hours' ride down the valley of the lordly Columbia is undoubtedly one of the notable travel experiences of the world. For scenic grandeur the features of the Hudson, the Saguenay, the St. John in New Brunswick, are magnified many times. The Rhine discloses historical features at every turn. Castles and terraced vineyards do not border the Columbia, but historical associations of intrepid explorers are not wholly absent. As a matter of fact, minor considerations of interest and of beauty are swallowed up in a sense of majesty. What God has wrought is so great that man's works and ways seem insignificant! The determination to make this wealth of natural scenery available to all is disclosed as the train approaches Portland and the daring project of the Columbian Highway is seen. We were favored with a four hours' automobile ride over the finished portions of this American Axenstrasse. Then what were largely blurred details of railroad travel became definite objects of admiring attention. The half-dozen or more waterfalls, reaching a climax in Multnomah, became a centre of interest, but the setting of these in mountain fastnesses, in fern-clothed cañons, in lordly forests of grim evergreen was not lost upon us. The moulded basaltic pillars of rock enclosed all in "God's first temples." It seemed fitting to glide silently through such scenes over surfaces so smooth that no jar was perceptible. But the human interest is not wholly absent—farms of abounding fertility, orchards of unmistakable promise, herds of beautiful cows, fine lodging places amongst the enfolding hills. Down by the river-side small fishing villages are grouped about numerous salmon wheels. Here and there a great cannery is seen. More than one famous Summer resort, with inviting inn and groups of tasty cottages, are passed. Way down below the roadway the extensive government works by which navigation is carried above the rapids are presented in panorama. By a marvelous feat of engineering the road in a figure eight rises about five hundred feet on a forty acre tract, and gives the advantage of distant views up and down the river. On a jutting promontory at a still higher elevation to which this leads a palatial rest and observation tower has been built. It is a memorial to the pioneers who discovered the Columbia. This commands a most impressive view of the majesty and beauty and human interests noted above. Two incidental elements added greatly to the pleasure of our memorable ride. The birds were singing as if for our entertainment. The Oregon lark has apparently added some notes to its familiar eastern song. Its gush of melody is truly full of happiness. The Spring flowers were in profusion everywhere. From the humble skunk cabbage with its large yellow scapes, to the wax-like flowers of the wild grape the prevailing color is yellow. There should be no difficulty in Oregon in fixing a State color!

(To be continued.)

J. H. B.

DR. BABBITT'S REPORT OF OUR NEW HOSPITAL AT SERMAIZE.

Dr. James A. Babbitt, of Philadelphia, went to France with the large section of our Unit which sailed last Autumn. His medical skill and driving energy have found the fullest expression in a new hospital opened in a large chateau at Sermaize in the Marne. The following is an excerpt from his report to the Field Executive Committee held in Paris, Third Month 6th, 7th and 8th:—

"(My early work) grouped around fifty early surgical operations in the Haute-Savoie region and around Sermaize. With insufficient equipment, under the towering mountains of Samoens and Entremont, we performed nineteen Alpine operations, all of which fortunately recovered. Thirty-one more operations of various kinds under the arrangements made by Dr. Earp, with operative surroundings picturesque, to say the least, left also a definite impression, and I guess Dr. Earp and I and a few other people will long remember working far into the night on a tendon of Achilles re-suture, with two tiny electric spot-lights, one on the ether and one on the operative end. With fear and trembling, however, the graft lived and the patient is walking again. This was a busy time and Dr. Earp naively remarked in a letter to Wilfred Shewell that the operative visits of Dr. Babbitt had added considerably to his detailed routine work. This period had an added desirable phase in that it gave the opportunity to look up a site for the famous new Chateau hospital, the particular site of which was first sighted by Dr. Earp.

So much has been reported about the Chateau and its doings that but little need be added to this report. The fifty operations recorded at the time of the opening, last Christmas, have since passed the two-hundred mark, and so far but three deaths, these on last-extremity operations, received too late to offer possibility of recovery. We have a happy, co-ordinated band at the Chateau at the present time; the men each assigned to special departments are rapidly whipping the grounds and buildings into efficient condition for service, the three American nurses, two English assistant nurses, and the splendid nurses and nurses' aides loaned us by the courtesy of the Red Cross are working night and day with untiring devotion. The hospital is running its limit capacity of forty beds practically all the time, with fifteen or twenty operations each week, and there is so much to do here that I hardly know how it would have been possible to develop the Chateau hospital without the particularly efficient service of the men who under the direction of [Ralston] Thomas have filled invaluable niches and are working to limit capacity.

Everybody here loves this service to the French people, and we thank the American and English Committee for this glorious opportunity. We must add the appreciation of the efficient services of Dr. Packer. We only regret that he could not have come into more intimate acquaintance with Dr. Hilda Clark, to whom we owe the foundation of this department.

Very respectfully,

JAS. A. BABBITT."

THE BOOK COMMITTEE.

The printed minutes and reports of Committees of our late Yearly Meeting are just from the press and I find in the opening sentence of the Book Committee's report this statement: "Our special field is to supply to earnest inquirers, certain of the approved writings of Friends, not elsewhere obtainable."

This modest statement is a very suggestive one and it is the purpose of this brief article to follow out a few of the suggestions which it has prompted.

In the first place it is but fair to those who may have little knowledge of the organization of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, to say that the Book Committee is a long-established Committee of the Yearly Meeting, reporting to it annually, its chief function being the conduct of a Book Store, at 304 Arch Street.

Were some one on a business venture to come to Philadelphia to open a book store and to develop a profitable trade in the book business, we know very well that he would not select the eastern end of Arch Street as a promising site—on the other hand, however, there is much to be said in favor of the location for the purposes intended. The Yearly Meeting feels at home here, the New Arch Street Centre attracts hundreds of people weekly, a mid-week meeting on the adjoining grounds contributes, it is a natural meeting place for most of the Yearly Meeting committees, and the fact that the property is in intent, if not in fact, owned by the Yearly Meeting, combines with other reasons, which need not be recited, to make the location a peculiarly happy one for the Book Committee, and we are ready to question, all things considered, whether the whole city offers any spot that is so favorable to the real objects that this venerable Committee has fallen heir to.

As long as the writer can remember, and of course for a much longer period, there has been a sameness in the annual reports of this Committee, that would at least warrant the thought which may have found expression in words, that a stereotyped plate, could be used, with a few blank spaces to be filled in each year with the appropriate numerals and one paragraph left vacant to be used, if by any happy chance some new work of sufficient importance should be performed by the Book Committee. This is not said in the spirit of jest or of criticism—the work of such a committee must, of necessity, be chiefly routine; it is only because it has some life and initiative that anything new ever occurs, for its field of service has little that naturally prompts to experimentation. A word in regard to this later.

The primary function of the Book Committee must always be the wise dissemination of the "approved writings of Friends." Funds for this purpose have been left and the honest fulfillment of the trusts must be a chief business of the Committee. No one questions this and no one wants to question it. If there is any doubt in regard to it at all, it must be as to an interpretation of the expression, "the approved writings of Friends."

It is hardly conceivable that any other construction than the one placed upon it by the present Committee can have weight—namely, such writings of Friends, as the Book Committee handled at the time these bequests were made, and others since added to the list which are in accord with them in spirit and doctrine.

This, then, is the first function of the Book Committee and a very important one it has been in the past, and there are reasons for believing that in the immediate future fresh channels for distribution will open up more numerously than they have in the past.

The items that add variety to the annual reports already alluded to are such as the one contained in this year's report, that a full translation of John Woolman's Journal is being made into German and that a series of brief translations of short selections from Friends' works have been translated into German and a few also into Danish and that another group of original brief essays on serious topics has been prepared and passed upon and they are awaiting translation.

Last year it may have been our interest centred in some translation work for the Friends in Japan, another year it was the re-issuance from specially prepared plates of the complete Apology of Robert Barclay, another year was the publication of the five volumes of "Quaker Biographies," and so we could mention other interesting items to the credit of the Book Committee, which have the stamp of freshness upon them.

Various reasons seem to conspire to make the present an opportune time for the Book Committee to search deeply into the real foundation reasons for its existence and to put the question whether it is measuring up to its possibilities. It seems to very many Friends, who have the subject much at heart, that it is allowing opportunities for real service to go unimproved; that it is indifferent to the fact that Philadelphia Yearly Meeting is made up of people who read books and who claim the right to pass individual judgment for themselves; that it, the membership, has offered an attractive room, in a peculiarly favorable environment for the purpose, has made the way very easy from a monetary standpoint for the Book Committee to increase the scope of its work and that now it confidently expects some commensurate results.

Personally, we believe these results will come and that many of them are already on the way. These are some of them—that in addition to the list catalogued as "approved," other writings of Friends, examined and passed by a small sub-committee be kept on sale at the Book Store; that all members of the Yearly Meeting feel a freedom to use the Book Store as a medium for the purchase of books for their home libraries; that the agent at the Book Store keep on hand the latest catalogues of the large publication houses and keep in monthly correspondence with one or more houses in London, which handle a line of English publications that American Friends would especially desire to purchase; that once each month as an advertisement there appear in THE FRIEND a list of titles and prices of at least ten new books—bearing either directly or remotely on Friends' interests, this would give a list of 120 books in the course of a year and the number could be stretched ad libitum; that very brief reviews of some of these be prepared by members of the Book Committee and offered to THE FRIEND for publication; that encouragement be extended by the Book Committee to any member who may have the literary ability to warrant the preparation of material for publication of special interest to Friends or bearing upon Friends' history; that steps be taken to add to the series of five "Quaker Biographies," other volumes, the material for such is far from exhausted and the continued demand for those already published is healthy; that certain plans for advertising, best known to the book trade itself, be studied by the Book Committee and possibly some of these with modification be appropriated by them; that if possible an additional revenue be secured to our Book Store by catering to the school trade of the private schools in and near Philadelphia. The list of suggestions is not complete, but the real object in writing will have been accomplished if Friends will furnish us with other items, or will repeat some of the same already given, coming from a different source, they will contain fresh suggestions.

We recall what John Milton said of a good book. It is not improbable that Friends of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting and other Friends elsewhere, as well as others who recognize with the poet the real value of a good book, will supply all the money needed, if they know that the work is to be accomplished by an efficient band of workers.

The newly appointed Book Committee has on its roll a company of men and women peculiarly fitted for the task hinted at in this paper and it is the writer's conviction that while nothing spectacular is desired and nothing of that nature will be forthcoming, there will be made a real advance in the task that the Committee feels it is now facing.

D. H. F.

Printed at suggestion of K. E. R.

THE VISION FROM MT. LOWE.

Looking southward to the sun-lands, on the Ocean's ebb and flow,
Keeping watch o'er Echo Mountain, dwells the spirit of Mount Lowe;
In the glowing light of noon-day, in the midnight calm and lone;
Gazing outward from the summit—like a ruler from his throne.

At his feet sits Pasadena, framed with fields of fruit and grain,
Where the valley of San Gabriel slopes in beauty to the main;
Pasadena decked with roses, and with gems of gold and green,
Resting on the landscape's forehead, like a crown upon the queen.

And the city of the Angels, on her hills of bronze and gold,
Stands amid her groves of olives, like Jerusalem of old;
With the purple Sierra Madres smiling downward from the dawn,
As Mount Hermon smiled on Zion, in the ages that are gone.

West and South, the blue Pacific, hemmed with surf and fringed with spray,
Bathes in clouds of molten silver, headland, island, beach and bay;
East and North, the inland deserts, with their ever-shifting sands,
More unstable than the waters, fade to distant mountain lands.

Oh! that vision of the Sunlands, where the sky is ever fair,
And the Autumn woos the Winter, with young rose-buds in her hair;
Where the orange blooms forever, and its leaf is never-sear,
And the mocking-bird is singing to his mate the live-long year.

It has haunted me in slumber, it has gleamed and throbb'd again,
In my solitary wanderings, in the crowded haunts of men;
Like a vanished revelation floats the memory back to me,
Of that dawn upon the mountain, 'twixt the desert and the sea.

—J. G. CLARKE.

LETTER FROM RUSSIA.

ON THE TRAIN BETWEEN MOSCOW AND SAMARA.

Second Month 26, 1918.

I am seizing a most unusual opportunity to get some letters mailed to you, which otherwise might never go, as Russian official life is rather disorganized at present. Probably this letter will come to you sooner than the other notes which I have sent, telling you of my unexpected trip to Moscow and Petrograd, to have our passports extended, and to interview the American Red Cross on our behalf.

A., the Treasurer of our party, also went to try to untangle the complicated matter of the transferring of funds from London through the Russian banks. We left Buzuluk about three weeks ago, traveling in a box car with about fifty soldiers—no seats, no eats—but a more interesting journey I never had. We arrived in Moscow after about four days, rather tired, but with a very friendly feeling toward the Russian common soldier, who had been very kind to us all the way.

A day in Moscow was very busy with visits to the Consul about our passports and trying to get some money changed; also buying surgical instruments in German, when I did not know any thing of their uses and the firm was out of the doctor's real requirements.

Thence we hurried on to Petrograd—at least we did not stay in Moscow, but no train can be said to hurry in Russia at present; if they attain twenty miles an hour it is considered reckless.

Petrograd I hated—it is big and new, and shoddily built, and at present terribly expensive. Wheat can only be had in small quantities, and you pay four or five dollars for a loaf of bread. The daily allotment per person is about 3½ x 2½ inches and ¾ inch thick, and at that it is black and moist and full of straw and dirt. Meat and potatoes and everything else are also expensive, but not quite in such proportion. For a serving of beef steak, and potatoes, and a cup of their thin soup with a carrot in it, and a cup of tea we used to pay a dollar—this without bread, butter or sugar.

Evidences of street shooting such as destroyed houses and broken windows, were not so numerous as in Moscow—in fact, it is marvelous how quiet both places are; and how orderly is the street traffic when one considers that there are no policemen anywhere, anymore, and that families have to wait in long lines every day for their bread and soup and milk (if they have babies). Rich people in fur coats (often officers who have been deposited) are sweeping snow in the streets.

"The little things of thy present may be great indeed hereafter."

The trolley cars are crowded all day long with people who seem to be going nowhere in particular, mostly in soldiers' uniform. The streets are also crowded with hundreds of little sleighs which were always used even by quite poor people when they went shopping.

The horses, even the cab horses, are beautiful animals, high, up-standing fellows who seem better fed than our country ponies, although hay is at a most prohibitive price. Some of the private teams were the best looking I've ever seen.

Snow is thick on the streets, often higher than the sidewalks, which in summer are a foot or so above the streets, and on First-day afternoon we saw some fine trotting races along the River Neva.

We were in Petrograd eight days, as the business hours there now only last from eleven till one or two o'clock, and not much can be accomplished in any one day.

First of all, I went to the Red Cross and was pleased to find they had already been told about us by cable from America; after considerable parleying they have sent a cable to Washington advising the Red Cross Headquarters to send us $25,000 for the purchase of seed wheat for our district. They also promised us a lot of medicines, hospital dressings and instruments, which were to go to Buzuluk in a special car along with bales of clothing sent out via the English Red Cross from the London Committee.

Then I had a pleasant, chatty talk with the Secretary of the American Embassy—a grandfatherly old man named Bailey, who had been through four revolutions; in Mexico, Guatemala, Costa Rica and Portugal. He gave me permission to send our official reports home in the Embassy mail bag (much good it will do us now!).

I had luncheon and spent a very nice home-like day with the Methodist minister of the American Church and his sister, who had lived in Petrograd for eleven years. They knew several English and American Quakers, and had pictures of the Friends' burial-ground outside Petrograd, where Daniel Wheeler's family are buried.

I spent day after day getting some money. Practically every bank has closed. Some have failed outright, and "Letters of Credit" and "Travelers' Checks" are unknown means of exchange. Gold is not much better, as it is liable to confiscation if it is known that you have any. However, the American Bank and the Red Cross gave me letters of introduction to some business houses; and although these were in a high state of panic, owing to the alleged rumor that the Germans would occupy the city in a couple of days, I finally got both my Letters of Credit entirely cashed, and all but $20 of my Travelers' Checks; there is no telling when we may have another such opportunity.

In peace times you get two roubles for a dollar. I got 8½. The American Consul was in a bad state of nerves, and he advised all the American business men to leave immediately; which I judge they were doing, from the excitement and chaos in most of the offices.

Then word came that the English Red Cross could not get the freight car for the bales and medicine. We had expected to return to Buzuluk in it. Moreover, they advised us to leave Petrograd while we could. We made a spectacular, though outwardly quiet, drive to the English Embassy, where they secretly handed over to us about $10,000 as a sort of loan until they could get out of Petrograd banks what is really there in our name. They also gave us official Red Cross letters which guaranteed free tickets on our application to the ticket office. So we set off through the dark and very crowded streets to the station, in two tiny sledges, with a great box of medicine given by the American Red Cross; also with various purchases in the way of books and clothes needed by our party. In all our baggage consisted of a suit case, two huge kit bags, a knapsack and the box of medicine.

On arriving at the station square, we found it jammed with people of all sorts and conditions, clamoring to get away from Petrograd. Porters shrugged their shoulders and said they were not working. A. knows a little Russian as I do, so he stayed with most of the baggage, while I took the rest and went to try to get through and see when the Moscow train went out, he had much the worst time, as there were many thieves about, and the soldiers who try to keep some sort of order, kept shooting at people all around them.

I found the Moscow train; deposited the box of medicine with the Red Cross stamp on it, as the least likely thing to be stolen, then went back to tell A.

We went through again by jollying the soldiers to let us through the regular lines, but when we got to the train again a new official was there who demanded tickets from us, we knew all along we should have had them. A. went back, while I held guard over the baggage on the platform. Things were pretty wild there; everybody scrambling to get into some train; families getting separated, soldiers coming in from Finland, where there had been some fighting, all bloody and wounded, and the temperature down to way below nothing. After I had waited for two hours (getting a bit anxious toward the end) A. came back with the news that the second class ticket office (where our tickets were booked) had been closed since early in the afternoon, and that the lines in front of the third and fourth class offices were miles long.

We decided that we would have to go back to the hotel and come down again in the morning, as it was then 11.30 P. M., when I spied another gate, only guarded by a common soldier, so I made a last attempt with my most socialistic smile and was rewarded with a "Pass, Comrade." Do you wonder that I like the common Russian?

So we and all our baggage got through. But after all it did not do us much good. Two Moscow trains backed into the station, already crammed with soldiers who had found their way to them and clambered aboard while they were in the yard.

They were even on the top and crowding on the steps, although such places would be bitterly cold when the train started. The Siberian train had gone out with women as well as men riding on the roofs of freight cars. A few soldiers broke some windows and crawled into the Moscow train through them, although the people inside shot at them for doing it in one or two instances.

The Russian crowd is mostly good-humored, and takes things stoically. There was less pushing than on a Mooretown trolley at Camden—but you simply couldn't get in when there were about two soldiers on every step of the train.

We waved it good-bye and went back to the restaurant for some food, as neither of us had had supper and A. no lunch.

We planned out our lives as German prisoners; composed cables, he to his wife, and I, to you. We decided to try to get on the Embassy train which was leaving for China the next morning, and then started off to hunt a nearby hotel at about 1.30 A. M., and found that the crowd outside the station had become so great, that the big doors and windows had been locked, and no one could get in or out. So we went back to the restaurant waiting-room—I found a seat and proceeded quite disgracefully to go to sleep. A., prowling around the station platform, discovered a new train going out to Moscow, although all the officials, whom we had asked and even bribed, had assured us there would not be any more. As soon as I woke up to the situation we "beat it," in and out, and over the sleeping bodies of hundreds of soldiers who filled the station, and out to the train.

Very few other people seemed to know about it either, for we found a nice, clean box car, with seats, and not very many people in it, and no one on guard to ask inconvenient questions about tickets. We started in about ten minutes, at a quarter of 4 A. M., Second Month 23rd, and you can believe me we were glad. It took us until 4 P. M. of the 25th to get to Moscow, as the train went slowly, but one of our fellow-travelers was so nice that we were almost sorry when the trip was over. He was a Russian Lieut. from Riga, named Davert, who had been a political exile in England for twelve years, and who is now in the Bolshevik Foreign Office. He assured us that this was the last train out from Petrograd to Moscow, saying that he was in an official position to know; but we shall probably hear some day that they kept on running steadily every day. He was a most cultured and charming man; had studied at Oxford, and had lectured on Socialism in England, so that his English was much better than my own; and he loved to talk on Bolshevism and Russian literature. I longed for a pencil and a knowledge of shorthand (also for enough warmth to make writing possible, our car was entirely devoid of heat). A. got bored after a while, but I could have listened for several more days.

Well! we got to Moscow and here even a luckier stroke awaited me. The American Consul has just made up a train for Americans to leave Moscow in, as it seems possible the Germans may take the city even sooner than Petrograd. Therefore, all the young men of army age are being hurried off to Vladivostok or somewhere. We telephoned up and got permission for me to go to Samara on that train, and here I am in a cabin-de-luxe of a first-class carriage—washstand for each compartment, clean linen sheets each night, and for fellow-travelers young bankers, and consul's sons, and a few wives. The woman who shares my room is a governess. Each end of our car and of two other first class cars occupied by Americans is guarded by soldiers to keep the "common herd" out, and I may say that the attitude of these lily-fingered, pampered, poker-playing youths on this car has come nearer to converting me to Radicalism than even my friend Davert's eloquence. However, I am enjoying the luxury of sleeping at night, and getting a face wash in the morning and also I shall get back to Buzuluk several days ahead of the regular train.

A. stayed in Moscow to get more money from the English consulate there. I am taking enough for us to run on for a month or two; I hope he gets through all right, but this morning I heard that the Germans were only one hundred miles from Moscow.

It has been the most interesting three weeks I have ever spent, and I'm so glad to have seen something beside the quiet country life of our villages. Some of the Americans will mail this in the U. S. A.

ANNA J. HAINES.

EXTRACTS FROM JUSTINE DALENCOURT'S ACCOUNT OF HER VISITS IN THE PROVINCES IN FRANCE, NINTH MONTH 7 TO 27, 1917.*

Several Christian Friends in the Provinces having learned that in spite of difficulties of travel, I had been into the country, insisted that I should go to see them.

"It is five years since we have seen you. If you only knew how much we need you! We are cast down, depressed, agitated, come and tell us what sustains you, and how you rise to face so many things, etc." For fear of not being able to reply to their confident invitation, also that I might write to them of the sweet joy I should have if my good Master traced for me another journey, I took care to tell them at once that it was not something which upheld me in my many difficulties, but someone, the great Master Himself, Jesus, my Lord and Saviour; living from day to day with me, helping me in a trifling matter, as well as in those higher, enabling the most common occupations by the discernment and intelligence that His presence gives to my efforts, results which I should be absolutely incapable of alone, even with the best good-will.

J. Dalencourt visited at Aulnat, an old couple of eighty and eighty-four years, who had been won to Protestantism by tracts distributed at the Exhibition of 1880, and who had many years ago attended her meetings at Boulogne. She now describes them as "Mary and Martha," the old man being the former, singing at the top of his voice without time, tune or melody, whilst his wife was busy serving the table, with hands crippled with rheumatism, he, Bible in hand, reading a chapter or psalm, then breaking into song suggested by something he had read. Having read much, talked much, and sung much, it was a true rest to go into the garden. What did I see? The ground covered with hundreds of pears; they had given many away and did not know what to do with the rest. "Make them into jam for your winter use, as you have sugar, happy mortals. (There were sugar refineries there). Listen, will you both sit down by the kitchen table, I will collect the fruit, and we will pass a delightful evening in peeling and preparing them. I will soak them in sugar all night and to-morrow we will cook them, whilst next winter we will have the pleasure, you in eating them, whilst thinking of your cook, and I knowing that I have prevented you from letting such a beautiful gift from the Creator be lost.

"The baker and milk man came in that evening and we were all very busy, a copper preserving pan was borrowed from a neighbor, the next morning I put the pan with its precious contents on a very low fire, whilst we had a good service of sweet communion in filial abandonment of our cares to our Heavenly Father for our white old age. My preserves were exquisite, just lightly crystalized in a way that secures their keeping. I left at 6 A. M. for M^{de}. Plantier's (Anduze, Gard), who was for three months my pupil and for eleven years my assistant, the best I have had in all my career. I had not seen her since the commencement of the war, when she left me by my own advice to take the post of matron at an asylum for old people at Anduze. I could not but encourage her to do so, even though I lost her at the moment when I had the greatest need. It was an immense pleasure to us both. But what gave me most joy was to see the wonderful change in her; she had had roughness of character, alas! I should have been less tried with them, had I been less free of them myself. Responsibilities and sorrow had thrown her into the arms of the tender Father, to seek the strength other than her own: we had delightful hours together, she is absolutely all that is wanted in this asylum, motherly, pious, energetic, practical, economical, her committee appreciates her highly. She amused me greatly by saying, 'It is you, Madame, who directs the asylum most of the time. I remember what you used to say and do, and experience makes me wish to copy you. It ought not to be, that I have lived in vain at 67 Rue du Theatre, Paris; also I am not the only one of your pupils who has experienced this.' . . . Just now there are so few pastors and many churches are without services, but in some districts the belief is held that in the lack of ordained ministers, a layman, male or female, may supply the need, which is a progress that rejoiced my heart, and to which I expressly called attention wherever I went. We had an excellent service in the pretty garden. In the afternoon, two girls drove me over to see Marie Bernard, at Congenies. Again a brotherly reception! Several of their grandchildren, now men and women, were there. Jacques Bernard takes long walks over hill and dale, coming in sometimes a little breathless to his surprise, asking his wife what it can mean? What does it come from? She answers 'From your eighty years, dear!' 'Really? How strange!' he replies.

"I went alone to see poor M^{de}. Durand, daughter of the Friend Cesarine Roger, so well known to Christine Alsop. She lost, some months ago, her only son in the war, and she is inconsolable. The Christians surround her very affectionately, but she will not be comforted. There were several people at her house; we had prayer and even sang. But the people of the South of France do not sing even the comforting hymns. I taught them a pretty little song. It is a bird, then a flower, then a poor shepherdess, each in sad circumstances. A traveler who saw them remarked on the dangers awaiting them, but each resolutely replied, "For me, I leave it to God." The poor dear mother abandoned herself and half sang and half murmured the refrain, "As for me I leave it to God!"

*Our readers may remember that this dear Friend has for fifty years conducted a Mission for Training nurses and Bible Readers. She continues active near the age of eighty and holds a meeting on First-days.

"My object in my next visit was to see a pupil who had lived with us in 1904. She was the orphan of a doctor, and adopted by a pastor, used to admiration, a proud, domineering nature, polite in manner, but biting in word. When the time came for her examination as a nurse, she refused; she had not worked, so failure would humiliate her. I could not exempt her—and gave my opinion to the weeping mother. It is so easy to remain a spoiled young woman, when one has begun by being spoiled as a child. My letter was judged as showing excessive severity, but in later years this pupil said "it proved the turning point of my life. Mme. Dalencourt is absolutely just." What was my surprise last winter to receive 500 francs for the poor, from this girl, saying it was "a token of gratitude and affection for the blessing God had given her through me." So when we met, it was no longer as the critic and the 'victim,' but as friends.

"I returned to Paris, having visited twenty localities in twenty days, and have felt all the time under the powerful protection of Him who loves to guide the steps of His children.

J. DALENCOURT."

THE QUAKER TESTIMONY.

The short statement made by the executive body of the Society of Friends of their intention to refuse compliance with the leaflet regulation under the Defence of the Realm Act might well induce the Government to pause and reconsider an attitude which in so meek a people has evoked such a defiance.

It takes direct issue with the spirit of Prussianism which animates the official policy, and which is in itself so plain a contradiction of the very purpose for which we profess to be contending with our arms. For Prussianism in essence does not consist in the supremacy of military force, but in the assertion of the arbitrary will of the State as paramount over the mind and will of the men and women who form the nation.

When the inner history of this crisis in our spiritual life is written, it will be the chief condemnation of our Churches that so few voices have been raised in defence of that spiritual liberty which underlies all other liberties, and the betrayal of which is treason against the vital principle, not of this Church or of that, not even of this religion or of that, but of every free Church and of every spiritual religion. For a Church or a Churchman who admits that he subjects the absolute direction of his voice, thought, and conduct, in matters of moral and spiritual import, to State orders, substitutes a secular, official God, for the Divine Governor of the universe. In point of fact, no earnest man, of whatever creed, or of no creed, would make such a formal avowance of complete surrender to his Government. If he consults faithfully his heart, he will always find some limit to his loyalty to his State, some acts which, if ordered, he would refuse to do.

To tell the Society of Friends that expressions of their sincere convictions upon Peace and War are to be subjected to the selection or repression of some official in a Government office, on the ground that these matters belong to politics, and do not touch the religious life, is not only to assert a separation between the religious and the secular, the falsity of which is recognized by every spiritual nature, but in the case of the Quakers it is a direct denial of the most cardinal point in their historic life.

It is this deep and sorrowful conviction that must have induced their Executive body to make the dignified announcement embodied in their resolution. "We realize the rarity of the occasions on which a body of citizens find their sense of duty to be in conflict with the law, and it is with a sense of the gravity of the decision that the Society of Friends must, on this occasion, act contrary to the regulations and continue to issue literature on War and Peace without submitting it to the Censor. It is convinced that in thus standing for spiritual liberty it is acting in the best interests of the nation."

We cannot believe that any Government, in a country still claiming to be Christian, and to be fighting for spiritual liberty, will lightly undertake to bear down by brute force the calm but perfectly indomitable spirit which breathes through this memorable little document. Such an attempt would be too patent a surrender to the forces of evil which we still aver that we are out to crush. Reprinted from "The Nation" (English).

DRIVEN INTO SOLITUDE.

Every man who has a Christian ideal of life finds, as it grows into his experience, that he is driven in upon his own soul more and more imperatively. Secret resources become more and more necessary to him. Conceptions of truth grow up within him, which the soul must develop alone.

Men who are not cynics often live, by force of nature, apart from their equals. They do their life's work better alone than they could with human help. Such men must meet Christ in the "solitary places." They have no adequate resources elsewhere.—AUSTIN PHELPS.

BE STILL.

"From vintages of sorrow are deepest joys distilled,
And the eup-outstretched for healing is oft at Marah filled;
God leads to joy through weeping; to quietness through strife;
Through yielding unto conquest; through death to endless life.
Be still! He hath enrolled thee for the kingdom and the crown;
Be silent! let Him mould thee, who calleth thee His own."

CHILDREN'S CORNER.

NEIGHBOR MALLOY'S PAT.—In the little village of Ferns, Ireland, Friend Clibborn was standing in the doorway of his cottage looking at his garden early in the morning. A band of United Irishmen had entered the town a few days before and taken violent possession of whatever quarters suited them, expecting the inmates of these invaded dwellings to support their men, and when any opposition to their demands was evinced, setting fire to the houses, barns and hay ricks of these unfortunate people. As Friend Clibborn stood in the warm sunshine, falling so cheerily over the scene, he noted column after column of black smoke ascending far and near, and knew that many a family was homeless that day and mourned losses that made the bright sunshine seem a mockery.

"Father," spoke his little son by his side, "does thee suppose they will burn our house and haymow?"

"No, Dick, I have faith to believe the Lord will keep us in safety if we trust in him; and even should he permit our property to suffer, it will be turned in some way to his glory."

Dick's small, anxious face cleared as he listened to his father's words. "Here comes Neighbor Malloy's Pat; how fast he is running, and look how he cries."

In truth it was a tear-stained face enough, as Dick intimated, that now looked appealingly up into Friend Clibborn's, as the ragged little figure stopped before the cottage door, and spoke hurriedly: "Oh, Mister Clibborn, an' won't ye come back wid me to our home? It is the sodgers who are fixin' to burn it over our head. Sure they took father away two sundowns ago and he's niver crossed the threshold since, an' our barn is burning and the cow would ha' burned in it if Molly hadn't found the sime to stale her away, an' she only six year old come Monday."

"Surely I will go with thee, if it may chance to do good," and Friend Clibborn put his hat on his head and followed as fast as might be, the hurrying, sobbing boy, running barefoot before him. "Why did the soldiers take thy father?"

"Sure they said he was a spy, an' I think they must be wrong, for he is growin' very blind, and niver cast a look on an auld gun I hid behind the door, but a big sodger saw it and said we had no business wid fire-arms at all in the house, an' it's little enough of a fire-arm it is aither, for it won't go off the laste bit in the world when it is loaded."

"How much better it is to trust to the arm of the Lord, Pat, than to such things as guns. Probably they would have let thy father stay at home but for that old gun."

"It's right you are, sir; I'll stick it down the dhry well, the next time and thrust to God intirely. Now spake to thim, sir, do," said the boy, lowering his voice as they reached the little hamlet, where Pat's mother was wringing her hands, while the crowd of rough, armed men, filling her dwelling, ate the porridge and potatoes set forth on the bare table, before, as they said, they burned the informer's house down. "It would be a pity to waste such good potatoes as these," remarked a rather jolly looking soldier.

"Indade an' it's wasted they are, whin they go to nourish sich as you uns," muttered Pat, slinking behind Friend Clibborn as the latter stepped up to a man seemingly at the head of this unruly company, and spoke gently to him: "Dost thou not think this poor woman's house might be spared?"

"The father is a scoundrelly spy, sir, and the brood of such a man is better stamped out," was the rude reply.

"Yes, but the family are surely innocent; think how much better it is to let them live quietly here and maintain themselves than throw them on the public moneys," persisted Clibborn.

"What do you mean interfering with justice when you never raise a finger to support the government; or help the rebels either for that matter?" angrily enquired the officer. "And for that reason we are always willing to relieve the suffering on both sides," responded Friend Clibborn.

"That's so," remarked one of the soldiers, "he took one of our sick men, just the other day and nursed him. The Quakers will never do any harm, but good."

"By your leave then, Captain," said another man, finishing his potato, "we'll let the woman keep her shanty this time; may be she'll give us another breakfast some day if we don't burn the house down now."

"Well, as you will," rather sulkily agreed the Captain, as he prepared to leave the small hut, for it was scarcely more than that, although the two little rooms held a goodly family of bright-eyed children who would have been homeless had not the destroying hand been withheld that day.

"Faith an' it's small feed you'll git here, agin," said Pat under his breath, "not a drop of milk or bit of potato left, not aven for the babby."

"What's that you say?" suddenly demanded a soldier, turning fiercely on Pat as he was going out of the door.

"Sure, yer honor, I was just a-sayin' you'd be welcome to the last grain of male in the house, any toime," promptly replied the scared boy.

"Oh, Mr. Clibborn, foriver blessed will your name be in our mouths," said the poor woman as the last soldier disappeared down the street. "Where would our children have slept this night but for you? Sure the dew would have been their only coverin'."

"It is the Lord's doing, my friend," replied Friend Clibborn. "He that trusteth in Him shall never be confounded. It is He that saith: 'Resist not evil; and if we do but closely follow His commands, we have His sure promise that He will never fail us.'"

"An' wout ye tell us some more about Him, Mr. Clibborn? It's a grand good thing to have the power over sich a lot of rapscallions as ate up all our breakfast this mornin'. A plague on them," exclaimed Pat.

Friend Clibborn smiled. "He tells us to love our enemies, Pat."

"An' that is not so aisy at all, sir, when we are half dyin' wid hunger," returned the boy.

"If thou wilt come home with me, Pat, we will do what we can to feed you to-day, at any rate. Farewell for the present, Neighbor Malloy; may our Father protect us all in these troublous times."

"A thousand blessin's go along wid you this mornin' for your goodness to us, sir," said the woman as Friend Clibborn turned to leave, accompanied by the hungry, but happy Pat. Both were eagerly greeted by little Dick Clibborn, awaiting his father's return to the family, who were all strengthened by this fresh proof of the Lord's protecting power.

This is but one of many such remarkable occurrences experienced by Friends in Ireland during the rebellion of seventeen ninety-six.

L. C. W.

A HOME LETTER.

FOURTH MONTH 3, 1918.

DEAREST MOTHER:—

This must be short. Joe Haines is going to take it into Paris. We are doing very odd jobs which follow one rapidly on the heels of the last. Anything from stirring a batch of cocoa to trying to comfort a crying baby. The reason why this sheet of note-book is so dirty is that I have been opening condensed milk—sticky stuff—and then coaling fires—dirty stuff—and water has to be carried from some distance. I have seen enough sorrow and grief and loss lately to swamp the world—and yet the war still floats its immense, heavy burden on the tears, the ocean of tears, that it has caused.

I have had to do with old paralyzed ladies who have been lost in the shuffle and in consequence seem to have lost their minds. I have seen young women cry so hard and break down so completely that one would have thought it an epileptic fit. I know an old man who had been ten years in an old man's home, who was turned out with the rest and is now on his way to Bordeaux or somewhere, full of hopes inspired by me of finding someone to take care of him when he gets there. I know a woman with eight babies—two sets of twins—who has lost her mother, who may be in Bordeaux, for aught I know or have means of finding out. I know an old woman of seventy-eight, so feeble she can hardly walk, who lost first her daughter and then her friends, and after she remembers—it takes her some time, her mind is so full of her losses—that it was I who counted her money for her and found her some straw to lie upon, begins an interminable "crise" of weeping thanks. And I, as everyone else, am powerless to find her people for her. I have seen crowds of thirty turned out on the streets, weeping one and all of them as they wander. All of them women and children and hags. I have seen—never mind—it's all too long and too wholesale.

Sometimes I feel as if we were awfully futile among so many, and yet I have seen some faces light up, and I know the hundreds we have fed and abrités, and I feel an immense admiration for the power of the Red Cross's money, and more particularly—you might tell Mary Mikell—for the Smith College Unit who are trumps one and all of them, and have been working in danger and real hardship like men, under all sorts of difficulties that they have overcome by sheer desire and sticking at it.

Last of all, I thank God for my French—God and mother!

[THOS. P. COPE, JR.]

HOME ADDRESS—100 E. Johnson Street, Germantown, Phila.

NEWS ITEMS.

THE C. O. SITUATION.—Statements concerning the welfare of the "C. O." members in three or four of the military camps, may seem in but small measure to portray the general situation the country over, however, we feel that there is a degree of uniformity in the treatment of objectors to military service by officers in charge at the encampments, whenever they may be situated. Though we may become impatient for action which will release our men together with many others, for real service which they can conscientiously perform for the common good, we are powerless to enforce it. There is in quite a number of camps a better understanding of our position, and though in the class referred to may be termed, as was stated by a prominent camp authority a few days ago, "thorns in the flesh," yet, segregation seems more readily accomplished than before the President's recent Executive order on non-combatant duty became operative. Fewer privileges are granted now, as a rule, than was the case some weeks ago; in some camps the C. O. is virtually a prisoner.

In Camp Meade, the passes which made it possible for our men to engage in voluntary work in the Hostess House, Library, etc., have been taken from them, so that there is now an abundance of time for reading and studying.

Permanent passes have also been called in, so that Wm. Bacon Evans's classes in French, which were an important part of the educational effort being carried on here, must be abandoned for the present at least. A quarantine for measles is in effect, so that even visiting the C. O.'s is not at present possible.

Our men in Camp Dix are as comfortably situated as can well be expected, spending most of the day in the Library. A member from New Jersey, after barrack life of about one week, during which period more than one visit was made to officers on his account, has been placed with our other men in the Library; we feel that this is a very commendable and speedy recognition in a clear case of a conscientious objector, carrying out his duty in a trying situation: a case quite similar to it was handled a week or two earlier.

Our scope of work is somewhat enlarged recently on account of two of our members being ordered to go to Camp Lee, near Petersburg, Va., on the 29th ult.; a visit a few days later made to that point found our men in different companies, though not far removed from each other: after spending some time with the men, important conferences were held with officers, including the commander of the Camp; it is too early now to give any definite information concerning the segregation with other C. O.'s in Camp, which we requested.

Alfred Kennard, Jr., our member who has been held at Camp Sherman, Chillicothe, Ohio, and who has been ill for a considerable time, has recently been honorably discharged, and has gone to his home in Barnesville. While we are indeed glad to learn of this change in the situation, we realize the loss which his comrades in the Camp must feel in his leaving them; his consistent Christian attitude upheld throughout many trying experiences, has been an example which we cannot but fully commend.

While the situation on the whole develops much more slowly than we had hoped, yet we should acknowledge the spirit of courtesy and toleration shown by officers of the Government in the treatment of the numerous problems which Friends and other objectors to militarism have presented to them.

W. B. H.

FIFTH MONTH 4, 1918.

"QUAKERS STOOD UP TO EVERY TEST."—Statement by Edward Eyrre Hunt, who was in charge of Red Cross Emergency Relief at the time of the evacuation of the Somme and Amiens. He is speaking to Lewis Gannett concerning the work of various Units.—L. D. N.)

"Some did better than I had ever dreamed they could," he said. "A few fell down. There was just one group which, as a whole, with only two or three unimportant exceptions, stood up to every test and could always be counted upon, and that was the Quakers. They had a certain sobriety of discipline, a capacity for team work, which no other group showed. They didn't merely rise to the emergency, in a burst of temporary enthusiasm, they worked steadily at a high pitch throughout. Some of them are still up there working night and day."

CLOTHING DEPARTMENT—CHEERING LETTERS FROM OUR MAIL-BAG.—

Texas—We are sending our money and working for the good we can do, and not just to see how much we can send.

Oregon—I am glad to report that we have sewing clubs in thirteen of our eighteen monthly meetings. I am hoping we may make it 100 per cent.

Indiana—We realize that this is "only a cup of cold water," but we are trying to do our little nite.

Ohio—Eight little boys, members of one of our First-day School classes, paid for the goods for a suit and had their names put in the pockets.

Maryland—Our meeting is a very small country meeting, with members much scattered, so we have to get help from others. We are one afternoon a week for any one who will pay us fifteen cents a person to do up their mending or any sewing one may wish to get out of the way. We hope in this way to make some money to buy materials.

Indiana—I hope some representative of the Service Committee will give the contents of the box a rigid inspection and let me know whether things are satisfactory. The work is growing on our hands, more women are becoming interested and we are feeling good over our work. We felt quite proud of the pairs of wool socks, several of them knit by our elderly mothers who cannot sew much, but who love to knit as they used to when their families were young.

Indiana—We stretched a clothes-line in three rows around the Sabbath-school room and pinned the garments on these. It made quite an impression on those who knew little of our work, as well as on those who had been sewing all the time, to see the whole display. Then we had little talks of two or three minutes by a few of our Committee, telling of the work in France and also the beautiful way in which money has come to us for our sewing here. Often material is gone; more is required and no money in the treasury. Nevertheless, we order more material and money is always in our hands before time for payment. Twenty-one dollars was handed to us after this display and the next Sabbath over forty dollars was given to us. Every two or three weeks we have some little bit before the Sabbath-school regarding the American Friends' work.

REBECCA CARTER.

REPORT OF THE TREASURER OF THE AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE FOR WEEK ENDING FIFTH MONTH 4, 1918.

Received from 16 Meetings	$3,397.94
Received from 16 Individuals	881.00
Received for Supplies	33.50
Received for Armenian and Syrian Relief	47.50
	<hr/>
	$4,359.94

CHARLES F. JENKINS,
Treasurer.

UNDER date of Third Month 23, 1918, the following letter to the Advocate of Peace, written by Ruth Hinshaw Spray, of Salida, Colorado, appears in that paper for Fourth Month:

To the Editor:

After twenty-two years of membership and reading the Advocate of Peace, I have no notion of dropping out; but so long as I live I shall follow the development, whether forward or backward, of the American Peace Society through its monthly organ.

I am a Quaker, "dyed in the wool," holding conscientiously to the principles of the Society of Friends in regard to war. I wish to say that I believe some of our Friends have not been quite fair with you, when we consider that the American Peace Society never was a Quaker organization, and the Advocate of Peace, even under Dr. Truedwood, did not necessarily always voice the Doctor's own views, which, expressed in editorials or otherwise, were always in accord with the Quaker view of war. However, I do deplore the fact that you have departed further from the beaten track than your position seems to warrant. And yet the Advocate of Peace is a great paper.

My belief is that peace can never come through a victory in this war; but I do believe that there are already indications that great leaders will arise to lead the working classes, who are doing the fighting and suffering the agonies, into an internationalized body. Then wars must cease.

A NOVEL appeal to the women of Germany has recently been drafted by a group of women in California. It is said that when a sufficient number of signatures is secured, this appeal will be forwarded to Germany. As reproduced in the Girard, Kan., New Appeal, it acknowledges first the debt of America to German women for their talented sons who have migrated hither and the fruits of the labors of their talented sons at home. Seeking to state the cause of the conflict, it denounces militaristic ease, and states the determination of American women that this caste must be thrown down, even at the cost of long-continued war. "We urge you to understand," it pleads, "that it is not merely him-~~self~~ it is ourselves whom our President pledges to a peace of justice, of freedom and self-government for all the peoples of the world. It is for you, women of Germany. . . . to make your voices heard and your will obeyed, to establish your great and wonderful nation among those modern nations in which the people rule. . . . There will never be an invasion or conquest of a revolutionized and democratic Germany!"

"A BOOK OF QUAKER SAINTS," by L. Violet Hodgkin.—There are always a few, and only a few authors in any circle whose writings are uniformly read first when the new number of the magazine arrives. This statement is emphatically true of the attitude of the American Quaker readers towards whatever Violet Hodgkin places above her name. Her book of "Quaker Saints" is the embodiment of attractiveness and will soon be found on the library table in very many Friends' homes in America. We hope soon to reprint a few of the briefer chapters in THE FRIEND and are glad now to pass on the following short review from The Fellowship Papers.—Eds.

Here is a lovely book for a child. Especially, perhaps, for that child which continues in us, even in our "Middle Years."

To-day, when our historic sense is alive as never before, it is delightful to be taken by this grown-up, loving hand, and led back into this strange bit of Old Seventeenth Century England; to breathe the atmosphere in which Quakerism first sprang up; to look in "Steeplehouses," and ale-houses, and see Fox, by a word, or a piercing look, or for three hours at a stretch, hold the people spellbound; to climb old Pendle Hill, where this solitary seeker and finder first saw the vision of "a great people to be gathered;" to follow these "Butterflies" among the Fells and Dales. Just to read the titles of Violet Hodgkin's stories is of itself a delightful adventure into old England and early Quakerism.

Quakers have always been called a "Peccoliar People." And we find indeed something "strange" in nearly all the stories given us. Extraordinary adventures and experiences, unusual character and endurance; most often, perhaps, something strangely beautiful. Yet, we feel that whatever is uncommon here, the hunger, the fulfillment, the beauty and the power—springs out of the very heart of our common humanity.

There is genius in having written about these old saints for children, because, for children, old things will come alive again in a way they will not do for anybody else. It is, by the little old pathways of childhood, the pathways of faith, love, catholic sympathies, and whole-hearted enjoyment, that Violet Hodgkin leads us back—out of our everyday preoccupations and prejudices—into the company of these old saints.

We believe it is put among the grown-up books, just out of reach—the children will climb up and devour it over and over again. And when the children are in bed the elders will take it down, and as they read it over the dying embers of the nursery fire, they will feel the undying fires of these old Quaker saints rekindling their hearts.

In the course of the discussions during the recent sessions of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, an interesting incident was related of a personal interview which Joseph Allen Baker, an English Friend and member of Parliament, had with the German Kaiser at the time of the Universal Peace Conference in Berlin a few years before the war. According to the story, this English Quaker was granted the rare privilege of sitting down with the Emperor and Empress in private. They sat a short time in silence. Then Friend Baker addressed them, setting forth his views, and so appealingly that the Emperor was moved to tears. "Almost thou persuadedst me."

NOTICES.

UNDER the care of a committee appointed by Haddonfield and Salem Quarterly Meeting of the Religious Society of Friends, an Appointed Meeting will be held in the Old Friends' Meeting House at Greenwich, N. J., on First-day afternoon, Fifth Month 19th, at 3.30. All are cordially invited to meet with us in Divine worship.

For the Committee, JOSHUA S. WILLS.

FRIENDS AND THE APPROACHING RED CROSS CAMPAIGN.—In view of the campaign to raise $100,000,000 which will be made by the American Red Cross during the week from Fifth Month 20 to 27, this Bulletin is issued to inform Friends in regard to the financial relation of the American Friends' Service Committee to the Red Cross.

The "Friends' Unit," so far as the American Friends in France are concerned, is a Bureau of the Department of Civil Affairs of the American Red Cross. The Red Cross has given us generous appropriations for special extensions of our work, but the regular expenses of maintenance have been borne in the past and must be borne in the future by the direct contributions of Friends to our Treasury. In order that the splendid work of our young men and women in France, Russia and Italy may have the support that it deserves this means that Friends must continue their regular contributions through their meetings and should when possible increase them to meet the growing expenses of our expanding Unit.

It is now nearly a year since this Committee began to solicit funds. In many cases pledges were made for monthly payments for twelve months. As soon as these pledges are fulfilled new ones should be made, and at the same time Friends who have given merely a single contribution and those who have never contributed at all should be urged to become regular contributors.

The work of this Committee to which the Society of Friends is already committed and which has already made such a splendid record, seems to have the first claim upon Friends. The officials of the Red Cross at Washington understand this and have assured us in recent interviews they fully approve of our carrying out our own collections through our own channels.

Whether these contributions of Friends to Charles F. Jenkins, Treasurer of the Service Committee, or to treasurers of local Friends' Meetings, can be counted as a part of the local quotas of the $100,000,000 fund is a matter still pending with local Red Cross officials. Further announcement will be made later.

These pending negotiations with local Red Cross officials will determine also whether we shall make a special campaign among Friends for our work at the time of the Red Cross drive. Whatever is decided as to our relation to this campaign Friends should remember that the expenses of our Unit must be largely borne by the regular contributions of Friends made through their meetings.

American Friends' Service Committee,
VINCENT D. NICHOLSON, Executive Secretary.

IMPORTANT ANNUAL MEETING OF ASSOCIATED EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF FRIENDS ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.—THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE ASSOCIATED COMMITTEE OF FRIENDS ON INDIAN AFFAIRS will be held at Arch Street Center (304 Arch Street) Philadelphia, on Third and Fourth-days, Fifth Month 28 and 29, 1918.

The first business session will be held on Third-day, at 2.30 P. M. At 7.30 P. M. of the same day will be held a meeting in the interests of the Indian work at which young Friends are especially invited.

New possibilities are opening before Friends in the Indian work and the meeting this year should be largely attended.

For further information address,

FLORENCE TRUEBLOOD STERE, Secretary.

HAYVERFORD, PA.

THE following interesting program has been issued in connection with Yearly Meeting week (Fifteenth and Race Streets). A cordial invitation is extended to all interested Friends.

Second-day, Fifth Month 11, 1918—

3 P. M.—General Meeting for Young People in the Cherry Street Meeting-house (entrance Cherry Street, west of Fifteenth Street).

THE YOUNG FRIENDS' MOVEMENT—A SPIRITUAL DYNAMIC.

1. The Meaning, Aims and Work of the Young Friends' Movement, of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, Arch Street—Harold Evans; of the Five Years' Meeting—Vincent D. Nicholson; of England and Australia—Janet Payne Whitney.

2. Our Opportunity, and How to Meet It. General discussion opened by Samuel J. Bunting and others.

6 P. M.—Young People's Supper.

7.45 P. M.—Fourth William Penn Lecture. Race Street Meeting-house (all Friends are cordially invited). "The Christian Demand for Social Reconstruction."—Dr. Harry F. Ward, of Boston University.

Between the afternoon and evening sessions of the Yearly Meeting on Second, Third, Fourth and Fifth-day evenings from 5.30 to 7 there will be Young People's Suppers, followed by informal conferences.

Second-day—"Ways in Which the Young Friends' Association and the Young Friends' Movement Can Co-operate for Their Common Task."—J. Harold Wilson.

Third-day—"The Home—A Christian Influence."—Beulah E. Atkinson.

Fourth-day—"The Mission Field—An Open Door."—Emily Oliver.

Fifth-day—"Young Friends and Social Reconstruction—A Resume of the Fourth William Penn Lecture."—Darlington Hoopes.

MEETINGS FROM FIFTH MONTH 12TH TO FIFTH MONTH 18TH:—

Concord Quarterly Meeting, at Media, Third-day, Fifth Month 11, at 10.30 A. M.

Philadelphia Monthly Meeting, Twelfth Street, below Market Street, Fifth Month 15, at 5 P. M.

Calhoun Quarterly Meeting, at Coatesville, Sixth-day, Fifth Month 17, at 10 A. M.

Burlington Monthly Meeting, Fifth-day, Fifth Month 16, at 10.30 A. M.

WOOLMAN SCHOOL

A Friends' School for Social and Religious Education.

Six Weeks Summer Term:

Seventh Month 1—Eighth Month 10, 1918.

Courses in Hebrew Prophecy, Teaching of Jesus, History of Friends in the Nineteenth Century, Social Service, First-day School Teaching for Children and Adolescents, The Bible in the Schools, and Internationalism.

Send for Circular.

ELBERT RUSSELL, Director,
WOOLMAN SCHOOL,
SWARTHMORE, PA.

W. J. MacWatters

Let Me
Help You

In Selecting Your

RUGS AND CARPETS

Domestic ~ ~ ~ Oriental

ALL WEAVES

The Home of Bundhar Wilton

"DURABLE AS IRON"

HARDWICK & MAGEE CO.

1220 Market Street

GLASLYN-CHATHAM

PARK PLACE

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

A Family House of Established Reputation.
Open Throughout the Year.

NATHAN L. JONES.

POCONO MANOR INN

POCONO MANOR, PA.

SPRINGTIME in the Pocono Mountains is ever a delight to those who admire and study nature. The Birds and Flowers are numerous and varied, and the Trout Fishing in the Swiftwater is wonderful.

J. W. HURLEY, Manager
(Pocono Summit Station, D. L. & W. R. R.)

"FRIENDS AND THE INDIANS"

FOR SALE AT $150 BY

FRIENDS' BOOK STORE
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

RESIDENCE: 254 S. 44th St. BELL 'PHONE Baring 2084X

WILLIAM OAKES

Plumbing and Heating Contractor
ALSO LEAD BURNING

260 SOUTH TENTH STREET
PHILADELPHIA

Box 1, Phoenix: Filbert 2566.

Book Free
Full of suggestions for making your bathroom safe and sanitary! Write for it, or visit our Showrooms.

HAINES, JONES & CADBURY CO.
1130-1144 Ridge Ave.
(At 12th and Spring Garden)

Hajoca

W. B. WEAVER
UNDERTAKER and EMBALMER
550-552 N. 5th St., PHILA., PA.
Special Attention Given to Funerals
In and Out of the City. Also Chapel Accommodations for Funerals.

BELL 'PHONE : ESTABLISHED 1880

To enjoy good health and a sound digestion use
PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT BREAD
made from the entire wheat grain ground on a stone mill. A perfect food and natural regulator. Sold by all good grocers in Philadelphia.

Write for particulars to

PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT CO.
10th & Susquehanna Aves., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

WALL PAPERS—All Grades
Custom of Friends Specially Selected
FRANK C. BUEHL
Successor to S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON
902 SPRING GARDEN ST. — PHILADELPHIA
Store open until 10:30 A. M. Any other time by appointment only.
Opposite Spring Garden Station, Phila., & Reading R. R.
ESTABLISHED 1849. BELL 'PHONE.

M. GATCHEL
126 N. 21st St., PHILA.
MILLINERY, PLAIN AND FANCY
'Phone, Spruce 3032

ALBERT C. RIDLEY
1714 SANSOM STREET
Engraving and Printing
FINE BUSINESS STATIONERY
Wedding Invitations, Calling Cards, Greeting Cards, Die Stamped Writing Paper
TELEPHONE—LOCUST 1782

Genealogist Elizabeth B. Satterthwaite
48 N. Broad St., Phos. P. 1

WE don't maintain two shifts here, but we have been known to work 36 hours at a stretch to get hurry-up jobs through on time. We do work night and day when we have to.

THE HOLMES PRESS
J. Linton, Engr., Pres.
1336 Cherry Street, Philadelphia

MEDICAL ARTS BUILDING
William S. Yarnall
Optician
128 SOUTH 16TH ST. PHILA.

JOSEPH G. FOGG
FUNERAL DIRECTOR and EMBALMER
S. W. Cor. Sixteenth and Race Streets
Special attention given to Friends' Funerals
Bell 'Phone : Spruce 1646

SHETLAND PONIES

Oldest Herd in United States
Established 1883

Specially attractive prices just now owing to change in business arrangements

HARTZELL BROS., - SEBRING, OHIO
Importers and Breeders

FOR RENT—WERNERSVILLE, PA.

BUNGALOW

of 7 rooms, bath, electric lighting, running water, etc.
Near Galen Hall Hotel, For Seventh and Eighth Months.
TATNALL & CO.,
P. O. Box 298, WASHINGTON, DEL.

CAMP OWAISSA For Girls,

A modest-priced camp on Naamni Lake in the Poconos; central bungalow, with fire place and dining porch; all tents have raised floors, facing lake; swimming, basket-ball, horse-back riding, over-night hikes, etc.; Red Cross work; limited to thirty-five girls; counselors all Friends.

EVALYN M. PAXSON,
No. 2414 Bryn Mawr Ave., Philada.

FRIENDS' SCHOOL, at ATLANTIC CITY, N. J. will need three experienced teachers for year 1918-19 for Seventh and Eighth grades, Fourth and fifth grades. Apply to Principal, ERLEN L. FOSTER.

FOR RENT—EIGHT-ROOM FURNISHED Cottage, bath, open plumbing, hot and cold water, sewer and spring water. Several meals daily; half hour ferry service to Newport and Narragansett Pier. Excellent opportunity where there are no more invalids in family. Meals must be taken at Maplewood.
Apply DR. W. LINCOLN BATES,
Janestown, R. I.

FOR RENT—OCEAN CITY, N. J. LARGE FURNISHED Cottage for Seventh and Eighth months. Five chambers. All conveniences. Garage.
W. HAROLD TOMLINSON,
114 Yale Avenue, Swarthmore, Pa.

A FEW SUMMER BOARDERS CAN BE ACCOMMODATED at our farm; rates reasonable. Apply
SEE R. SHARPLESS,
Phone J. C. S., London Grove,
West Grove 104, R. 5, Chester County, Pa.

WANTED—A COMPANION FOR A WOMAN Friend, in a suburban town.
Address "Z."—"THE FRIEND."

WANTED—BY A FRIEND, A FURNISHED house, for three adults for the summer months.
Address "R. C. B."—"THE FRIEND."

TO ADVERTISERS.—THE FRIEND is open for selected advertisements at the following rates: One inch, 50 cents, or 4 cents a line; no insertion for less than 25 cents. Long term rates given on application.
Standing business cards are also solicited.

Well Built—Easily Used

NONKINK HOSE

LIGHT, smooth and flexible. It does not easily kink or break. It cannot be separated into its original layers because it is made under pressure that forces the rubber layers through the cotton fibre tubes.

It is easily pulled about and a pleasure to use.

Let us supply your needs also in Nozzles, Reels and Sprinklers.

J. E. RHOADS & SONS

PHILADELPHIA: 12 N. THIRD ST.
NEW YORK: 102 BEEKMAN ST.
CHICAGO: 322 W. RANDOLPH ST.
BALTIMORE: 37 S. CHARLES ST.
FACTORY AND TANNERY, WILMINGTON, DEL.

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE MATERIAL THAT WE SELL

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY
MANUFACTURERS
PHILADELPHIA

Philadelphia's
Representative Store

ELKINS, MORRIS & CO.
BANKERS

REPRESENTATIVES

PAUL W. BROWN
JAMES P. MAGILLLAND TITLE BUILDING
PHILADELPHIA, PA.RAILROAD AND PUBLIC UTILITY BONDS

FOR

CONSERVATIVE INVESTMENT.

FULL PARTICULARS ON REQUEST.

SEE WALKER & KEPLER

FOR

Good Electrical Work

531 CHESTNUT ST. -:- PHILA.

HARRY S. LEE

313 WALNUT STREET

PAINTER AND GRAINER

ANTIQUE and OFFICE FURNITURE RESTORED
JOBGING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO ESTIMATES

Letchworth Cottage
Spring Lake Beach, N. J.

Open for the Season 1918

A. C. & S. H. Letchworth

Assoc. M. AM. Soc. C. E. Bell 'Phone—Lombard 3412

EDWIN M. EVANS
CONTRACTOR & BUILDERMy jobbing department is well equipped,
prompt and efficient

338 S. LAWRENCE ST. :: PHILA.

R. C. Ballinger Ernest R. Yarnall John A. Stratton
TELEPHONES

Bell—Spruce 17-81 - - Keystone—Race 637

R. C. BALLINGER & CO.

CONTRACTORS and BUILDERS
218 N. Thirteenth St. Philadelphia.

ALFRED C. HAINES

Building Glass and Paints

56 N. Front St., Philadelphia.

Premier Duplicating Co.

Mimeographing, Multigraphing, Printing, Type writing, Addressing, Mailing, etc.

630 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

WM. H. PILE'S SONS

BOOK and JOB PRINTING

422 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO THE
PRINTING OF BOOKS and CATALOGS

Bonds Legal
for New York State and Massachusetts Savings Banks
Also suitable for Trust Funds

FOR the convenience of investors we have combined in booklet form
the official lists of Bonds Legal in New York and Massachusetts, which will be sent upon request.

Ask for Bonds Legal—PF-158.

The National City
Company

Correspondent Offices in 24 Cities
Philadelphia—421 Chestnut St.
Telephone—555 Lneust
Bonds Short Term Notes Acceptances

GIRARD TRUST CO.
BROAD and CHESTNUT STS.

CAPITAL
AND
SURPLUS } $10,000,000

Acts as Executor, Trustee, Guardian,
Administrator, Assignee and Receiver.
Safe to Rent in Burglar-proof Vaults.
Interest Allowed on Deposits. :: ::

E. B. MORRIS
PRESIDENT

Friends Arch St. Centre
304 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Provides comfortable accommodations for guests by the day or week. Meals at moderate prices.

AMELIA D. FEATHERSTONE, Mstrs.
PROP.—MARKET 1871.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 91.

FIFTH-DAY, FIFTH MONTH 16, 1918.

No. 46.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price $2.00 a year in Advance.

Publisher, DAVIS H. FORSYTHE.

Editors { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
DAVIS H. FORSYTHE,
MARY WARD.

Make remittances payable to

THE FRIEND,

No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

"The divided mind fails because it is not for one thing or the other. It is impossible to serve God and Mammon; truth and God go together in one allegiance; and a non-theocratic element in a man's thought will be fatal sooner or later to any aptitude he has by nature for God and truth."

—T. R. Glover

THE FRIENDS AND INDIVIDUAL LIBERTY.

Of all the possessions of the present which are the legacy of the past and the hoped-for inheritance of the future there is nothing more precious than what we call individual liberty. It may be ever so difficult to define it, almost impossible at a time like the present to place the proper bounds and limits to it, and to say this is God-given and an inherent possession of my own and no power, less than the Divine Power itself, can meddle with it. None the less, this very doctrine is at the root of that which most seriously confronts thousands of men to-day as nothing else has ever puzzled them in their experience.

We live a generation, maybe two generations and this question is not brought to the front. The principle of individual liberty is not at stake, it appeals to our reason, and all persons grant the justice of the proposition, and the Friend points with not a little pride to those days of the Commonwealth in England when the Quaker seemed to have won for himself and for all others in the battle for religious and civil liberty, and with even greater, and it may be more honest pride, we see how there has been written deep into our own civil law, and into the fundamental statutes of this great nation, certain principles of liberty which will be found rooted in the civil code drawn up by the young Quaker proprietor and his friends, when the laws for Pennsylvania were first framed.

To the student of modern history the word Quaker stands more as the synonym of personal liberty than anything else.

But this favored generation passes and the world has not been won to the Quaker standard and a national war confronts us. Where is the Quaker principle to find place? It is no easy matter to give a satisfying answer to an army official on the Quaker attitude towards war. Ask some of our boys who have been placed under the strain of doing so—neither is it an easy matter to answer all the questions that surge in upon your own consciousness, when the matter is brought closer home to you for individual solution than it has yet been brought to many of us, neither again, I believe, is it an easy task, for the military man to find the wherefores that completely satisfy the deepest demands of reason and of instinct within himself. The great multitude of men are carried on by a resistless flood of apparent argument, which does not appeal to the best and truest within them, but which from the very nature of the case forces a not unwilling surrender to the pressure of the hour.

It would be false to hint that Friends have signally escaped sacrifice on account of their conscientious convictions against war and their equally pronounced support of individual liberty. It is due to the sacrificial surrender made by them and others in the past, more than to all else combined, that they are receiving such generous treatment at the hands of military authority to-day. But each war presents new phases to the would-be conscientious objector, and if he searches for them, new reasons for the plausibility of the present war being an exception to those that have preceded it and offering certain conditions which no other war has offered and from these it is but a step for him to accept military service.

We find our strongest support for the reality of the Quaker conviction from outside our ranks. The world at large recognizes the sincerity of the Quaker position and the fact that the rights of conscience have been recognized for generations in England and America sufficiently attests to this.

Lincoln's attitude towards Friends during the Civil War is known to all who have read history to any purpose; both he and his war-secretary, differing as they did on many details, were substantially a unit in their recognition that Friends had earned a hearing.

Friends have not been alone in this movement; it dates back before the days of "early Friends." Chapters from Rufus Jones's "Spiritual Reformers in the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries" will show us how groups of "spiritual reformers" here and there in Europe, mystics or humanists or anabaptists or by whatever name they were known among men, were staunch defenders of Peace. To-day, too, there are sects both in this country and abroad, profoundly opposed to war, and numerically stronger than Friends, who however, have not won the same distinction with ourselves as Peace men, it may be because we have more widely than they made public our views and courted argument and controversy concerning them.

More than four hundred years ago there was born in the little French village of St. Martin du Fresno, close by Lake Geneva, one who lived his checkered career of fifty-eight years and near the close in a little volume in his native language addressed these words to his fellow countrymen: "Oh my country, my country, my counsel is that thou cease to compel men's consciences, that thou cease to kill and to persecute. . . . And you, that are private people, do not be so ready to follow those who lead you astray and push you to take up arms and kill your brothers. And Thou, O Lord our Saviour, wilt Thou give to us all grace to awake and to come to our senses before it is forever too late."

The chapter from which this is taken closes—"The time was not ready for him, but he did his day's work with loyalty, sincerity and bravery and seen in perspective is worthy to be honored as a hero and a saint."

There were others like-minded with him—a band of mute witnesses, the testimony of whose lives is being to-day witnessed to by many men in England and America who find they cannot surrender individual liberty, when to do so forces them to break Christ's supreme law of love. They recognize freely that others must have the same degree of liberty they claim for themselves, and unable to accept others' philosophy of life, they respect the motives that stand behind their actions.

D. H. F.

EDITORIAL NOTE.—Since the appearance of Editorial—"An Unfair Question" in our issue of Fourth Month 25th, papers on the same topic and drawn out by it, have reached us from Pasadena, California, Guilford College, N. C., Fountain City, Ind., and points nearer home. Besides these, two letters, one from London Grove, Pa., and the other from Woodbury, N. J., have come to us, relating to the same subject. The writer of one of these letters says, "I was glad to see the recent Editorial, 'An Unfair Question?' and the answer given to that much used query and I thought of the brief extract which Joseph Walton had taken from Joseph Hoag's Journal and which will be found on page 473 of 'Incidents Concerning the Society of Friends.' This question has been put to me many times and I often refer to the experience of Joseph Hoag." J. C. S.

It was our intention upon the receipt of this note to print the extract from J. H.'s journal, but a lack of space forbids at present, as the paper, to be made intelligible, is of considerable length. We may later be able to afford it space.

The other letter closes thus: "If you cannot use the copy I enclose, please forward it to Paul Cope, Care Library, Camp Dix, N. J."—Eds.

IMAGINED TESTS.

The editorial in THE FRIEND of last week entitled, "An Unfair Question," is timely. Our heavenly Father does not require His child to test himself by what himself or some one else may imagine, but rather to rest on His assurance: "As thy day so shall thy strength be."

The writer has often been asked what he would do in a hypothetical case where wicked and unreasonable men would invade the home and proceed to perpetrate deeds of violence and cruelty. Would he resist?

Those who ask such a question, and justify resistance, even to the taking of life, do so on the assumption that such resistance would be successful. This is by no means certain, for men who attempt such things are armed for defense, and are desperate in proportion as they see danger threatens them.

A case occurred near here a few years ago, when a Friend's house was entered by a robber. The Friend in resisting lost his own life.

Is it too much for a Christian who has fully committed his way unto the Lord, to trust that He who has taught us to pray, "Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil," will so throw around him His protecting care, as not to permit such a trial to come upon him? We are told "the angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear Him, and delivereth them."

It is recorded of Robert Barclay that he was once waylaid by a highway robber, who demanded his money or his life. Barclay calmly replied, telling him if he was in need he was willing to befriend him, "but," he continued, "being delivered from the fear of death I am not to be intimidated by a deadly weapon," and remonstrated with him against the wickedness of doing violence to one who never did him any harm, and stood ready to befriend him; whereupon the robber apologized and allowed Barclay to proceed without further molestation.

The experience of Friends in Ireland during the Rebellion in 1798, shows that it is safest to be known to belong to a class who will not oppose violence with violence.

An authentic account of this terrible rebellion* says: "For years previous to the breaking out of this rebellion in 1798, many of the inhabitants of this nation suffered great depredations by persons breaking into their houses at night and demanding and taking their arms."

"In the years 1795 and 1796, the Quarterly Meetings recommended Friends who had guns in their houses to destroy them, which was united with and confirmed by the National Half Year's Meeting for Ireland," and the account continues: "Such Friends as had guns very generally destroyed them."

There was a family of Friends by the name of Goff, living in Ireland at this time. They appear to have been prominent, both as citizens and Friends, being possessed of considerable wealth. This family suffered greatly from repeated depredations of the soldiers of both the royalist and rebel armies. They were often supplied from the Goff's table.

A daughter of Jacob Goff, the head of this family, would quite an explicit account of her father's sufferings, as well as that of other Friends. She writes: "Many were the heart-rending sufferings that some families endured, being turned out of their comfortable homes, and spending many nights in fields and ditches. Others who still remained in their homes, were wonderfully favored with faith and patience under these privations, conscientiously adhering to the law of their God, thus experiencing to their humbling admiration the Name of the Lord is a strong tower in which the righteous find safety."

Dinah Goff gives many instances of ill-treatment endured by Friends. The account regarding her father, Jacob Goff, is a sample: "Having all retired to rest, we were aroused by a terrific knocking with muskets at the hall door. . . . On my father opening the door, they seized him and instantly rushed up to his room, breaking a mahogany desk and bookcase to pieces with their muskets and demanding money. My father handed them twenty guineas, which was all he had in the house. . . . The dreadful language they used impresses me to this day. Money seemed the sole object of their visit that night, as they repeatedly said, 'Give me more money,' with a threat to murder him, if he refused. . . . When they found there was no more money, they desisted, asking for watches, which were given them, and at length they went away, after eating and drinking all they could obtain, and charging my father to have more money for them the next time or they declared they would murder him."

After the close of this terrible rebellion, the Friends made this response: "It is cause of thankful acknowledgment, to the God and Father of all our mercies, on the retrospect of that gloomy season, when in some places Friends did not know but that every day would be their last, seeing and hearing of so many of their neighbors being put to death, that no member of our Society fell a sacrifice but one young man. Alarmed for his safety, he fled to a garrison town in the county of Kildare, took up arms, and put on a military uniform. The place, however, was soon after attacked and taken by the insurgents, and he was killed with many others; while the relations whom he had quitted were preserved unharmed, without any external defense."

LUKE WOODARD.

FOUNTAIN CITY, IND., Fourth Month 29, 1918.

FINISH every day and be done with it. You have done what you could; some blunders and absurdities crept in—forget them as soon as you can. To-morrow is a new day. You shall begin it well and serenely, and with too high a spirit to be encumbered with your old nonsense.—EMERSON.

*Six Generations of Friends in Ireland, by Jane M. Richardson.

THE SOMBRE WALLS OF A FRENCH MONASTERY RING WITH THE SHOUTS OF CHILDREN AT PLAY.

The Mission at Le Glandier is a different kind of reconstruction from that in the war-devastated areas at the front. It is the reconstruction of some six hundred Belgian children, who have been brought from their homes, in the famous town of Liège, to this quiet corner of France, down towards the Spanish frontier.

These children are not orphans, but under the conditions that exist in Belgium to-day, it is impossible for many of the mothers to provide for their families. For three-and-a-half years they have lived on the bread and "la soupe verte" provided by the Germans, and many still wear the clothes given them by the American Commission. To alleviate these conditions, the American Red Cross for Belgium arranged to have one thousand children brought out, through Germany and Switzerland. This unoccupied monastery was rented, and some three months ago the first six hundred children were brought here.

Although the Red Cross is financing the colony, the administration of it is left to the Belgians. Captain Graux, representative of the Belgian queen, is in charge. Since the children are between six and fourteen years of age, the monastery has been turned into a great school. The Belgian army released a score of professeurs for the work, and other Belgian men and women, all refugiés themselves—form the administration staff. The Red Cross provided a medical staff of ten, and some thirty soldiers were loaned by the Belgian army to make the necessary repairs and alterations. Nearby French authorities furnished ten German prisoners, who do all the heavy manual labor.

The monastery itself seems as if made for the purpose. "La Chartreuse" is a group of some thirty great and small buildings, shut in from the neighboring fields by a high wall. Nestling in the bottom of a beautifully wooded valley, its white walls gleam in the sunshine on bright days, so that as one comes down the road from Pompadour, there are glimpses of it through the trees. Pompadour is the site of the nearest railroad—nine kilometres—as well as of the old chateau of Madame de Pompadour.

So much of description of the school in general, for the reader is probably asking, what of the Friends' Mission?

Captain Graux has liberal ideas of child education, corresponding to those in England and America, although in Belgium all is patterned after the German system. When he was planning the colony, he wished to secure seven young Americans, who would have charge of the boys when they were not in class with the seven Belgian professeurs who constituted the entire staff in the beginning. He wished also to secure seven American women, to take similar charge of the girls—hoping in both cases that the volunteers would be of such a kind as could implant what is best in Anglo-Saxon ideals in the children. But he could secure neither, and for the girls he had to employ local French institutrices. Then, hearing of the Friends, he appealed to them for some young men workers.

When I came down to Le Glandier, soon after New Year's, Captain Graux had just received word that fourteen more professeurs had been loaned to him by the army; they would take general care of the children. So he asked the Friends for young men, who would take especial charge of all the physical training of the children, girls and boys. So now there are two Englishmen—Moreton and Vickers—and two Americans—Edwin Zavitz and I here, co-operating with the Belgians. Captain Graux believes thoroughly in moulding children through their play, for he was the first to introduce Boy Scout work into Belgium before the war.

It is the kind of work General Baden-Powell describes in his new edition of "Scouting"—"The ultimate victory of the war will come years after the fighting has ceased. . . . The worst of war is that it kills the very best of our manhood, and leaves the wasters and non-efficient to carry on the national life. . . . We must utilize every single individual, and to this end we should take each boy in hand and complete, outside the school walls, his character education."

And the children are most responsive. If ever a smile, a kind word, a desire to help a less fortunate were appreciated, they are by these little exiles. For, although they call themselves "repatriés" they all long to get back to Liège, war or no war. For in Belgium home life is even stronger than in France or with us, and at Le Glandier there are six hundred children massed together. So they are so lonely, lost in this sea of other children, that they cling to us at every opportunity, longing for a personal touch, a personal word. If we Friends' workers have within us the spark of love, surely we could find no better place to plant it.

When I first came, six weeks ago, it was a dismal sight. There were no classes then, and the seven professeurs, worn-out by their impossible task, herded the children about like sheep, rapping them with canes, or cuffing them, to keep some semblance of order. The children would huddle about the stoves in the refectory in great groups—there was no one to cheer them, nothing for them to do, except the various chores, which they welcomed. There is a great court in the centre of the monastery, where a dozen great pines form a hollow square. But the only children I ever saw on it, playing, was one disconsolate little group of five boys, half-heartedly pitching coins at a line. They were all within—some silent, some chattering, some talking of when they would get back to Belgium.

I remember when the new professeurs arrived, and saw their task, the remark of one: "Je voudrais mieux être la-bas (at the front) qu'ici." And I will never forget the first time I tried to get the girls to play. For they did not seem even to know how to play—there was no play in their hearts. But when it grew dark, and the others went back to the refectory, a little group remained behind, clustering about me, holding my arms, or my hands, hanging to my coat: wanting to know about America and the people who had sent clothes and food to them; Belgian children that they'd never seen, telling me about their sisters and brothers, mothers and fathers, where they were, and what they were doing—how soon did I think they'd get back to Belgium? So that when the time came for their supper, I could hardly bear to see them go, for they seemed so lonely. That, and similar talks we had with the girls—several before the open fire in the bibliothèque—prompted us to ask Charles Evans if it might be possible for some Friends' women workers to come here. For the girls are even lonelier than the boys, for the French governesses fail to respond to their need of affection.

Three weeks ago Edwin Zavitz came, and with his experience in playground work we were able to take care of nearly all the children who were free and not in classes. Now Moreton and Vickers are here, so that at all hours of the day the great court wears a different aspect from what it did formerly when three boys ran away to Paris, chafing under the inactivity.

There is always a game of football going on in the square between the trees, often as many as thirty playing, for the game is soccer football and easier to learn than the rugby varieties. Then there is often another game in progress for the little fellows, of field hockey for the girls, or basket ball for the boys. But the girls like best skipping ropes or singing games. Then, in a corner, some boys will be trying to play two-base baseball, known variously as "one cat," "slugger," or "single-hand." But the games do not matter so much, it is enough that they are learning to play, that there is color in their cheeks, life in their eyes, and happiness in their hearts.

Often, when the play is ended, they will crowd about us and even kiss our hands to show their gratitude. One very sturdy little fellow, eleven years old, who has often acted as football captain, surprised me the other day by suddenly throwing his arms about my neck and asking for a kiss—and I cannot conceive of an American street-boy in such a rôle. The little tots, girls and boys, cluster about, clinging to hands, belts, or legs, in such a way that it is often hard to pay attention to the others. Many of the little girls call us "papa."

Without the chartrouse are the hills and the woods—and thither we take the older boys and girls whenever possible. The country is splendidly adapted to scouting. But since Liège is an industrial town, "coal and iron," none of these children enjoy the country as we hope they will learn to. But if any scenes could awaken a love of nature, those about here would. And since the boys love all things Indian, boy scout work appeals to a large number. "C'est vrai que vous êtes indien?" I have often heard at my elbow. For I tell them undeniably of wigmaws and wampum, and totems and war-whoops and papooses; their appetites are thoroughly American.

As for the Belgians with whom we work, there is no difficulty in any way. For many of them, after passing through almost four years of war, have the same ideas that we believe to be true.

And they have suffered far more than the English or the French, so that they know what war is. So with this work of hope, let me close this letter to "those back in America."

HENRY H. STRATER.

CONFERENCE ARRANGED BY THE SOCIAL ORDER COMMITTEE.

The attendance at the conference arranged by the Social Order Committee for the afternoon and evening of Fourth Month 25th gave evidence that there is a fair degree of deep interest in the problems connected with the present social order.

The afternoon was devoted to four round table groups, each of which discussed problems of household expenditure, of personal expenditure, of the relation between household employer and employee, and of the purchaser. In all of these groups it was the purpose to bring out and emphasize the fundamental need for self-sacrifice and for consideration of the other person.

In the evening, Professor Harry F. Ward, of Boston University and the Union Theological Seminary, pointed out in telling fashion the inhumanity that prevails almost inevitably in industry as it is now organized. Business, or industry, as it is conducted to-day, is condemned in three particulars:

1. It finds it cheaper not to consider as very important the actual life of the worker. In some industries the loss of life averages a man killed every two weeks. Then there are the "bad air diseases," the fifty separate kinds of poisons resulting from the raw material used, and the ordinary woeeful "miscellaneous diseases" beside.

2. It does not consider the inner or higher life of the worker, except in so far as the laws against child labor and long hours of work for women are strictly enforced. Overwork, which results in fatigue, and under-pay, which results in under-nourishment, are responsible not only for lack of mental and physical development, but even for alcoholism, criminality and vice. "It is all very well for Andy to give us his libraries," said a workman of Carnegie's, "but how are we ever going to read a book after working twelve hours a day in his shops!"

3. Business shuts the door on the striving of the spiritual life; love to your fellow-man must be left behind when you enter your business office or work-room. "Oh, Mr. ———, why on Sunday he has his Bible class of men, but on week-days in his office over there he is a slave-driver," is what can be said of too many business men. And among the workers, too, where competition demands inexorable judgments and each is little to get ahead of the other fellow and to give his employer as little as possible for what he gets, here, too, the Christian principle of love and brotherhood seems to be forced aside.

The problem of to-day is to remove this heartless antagonism and these ruthless methods. Jesus Christ would stand for equality of opportunity, for a just distribution of the good things so that all can share in them. Co-operation must replace competition, democratic control of industry must succeed the autocratic, and a national minimum of income and of leisure to make the most of life must be secured to all. Fellowship and fraternity will then result; men can then work in love rather than in hate; and God can then work in and through such men.

SOME HITHERTO UNPUBLISHED PORTIONS OF RICHARD JORDAN'S JOURNAL.

Richard Jordan, an eminent minister of the Gospel of Jesus Christ though a man of little "school learning," was born in 1756, and died in the year 1826. His manuscript journal is now (1918) in the possession of Alice C. Rhoads, Moorestown, N. J.

For one reason or another, certain portions of the written Journal were omitted in the preparation of "A Journal of the Life and Religious Labors of Richard Jordan, a Minister of the Gospel in the Society of Friends," Thomas Kite, 1829.

In the belief that the reasons which induced the omission of the passages referred to do not now obtain, and that their interest has rather increased with the intervening years, some of them are here presented, without change or correction in the original spelling.

W. B. E.

While on a religious visit to "some of the Northern and Eastern States," at Rahway, New Jersey, Eighth Month, 1797, he writes:—

At this village we met with Joseph Grillet, from N. York, whose Brother Stephen we got some acquaintance with at Philadelphia, they were sons of a French nobleman and fled from the Massacres in France soon after the Revolution in the government there, and residing on long Island when Deborah Darby & R. Young from England were there on a religious [visit] they attended a meeting appointed for these dear women, with no other view (as they have since said) than to see a couple of fine English Women, but they were so reached under their Testimony, that they were both convinced and were now united in membership with friends, and choice young men they appear to be; Stephen speaks acceptably in publick, it is the Lord's doing and marvellous in our eyes, we also went to visit Hugh Davis who from an officer in the British Army has become an acceptable preacher of the gospel of Christ which Breathes peace on earth, and goodwill to men.

Eighth Month 17, 1797.—Referring to the large evening meeting at Market Street, Philadelphia, he says: . . . the publick service fell chiefly on Nicholas Walm and myself, both of us being pretty largely engaged in Testimony, and the meeting concluded with great Solemnity.

(Eighth Month 1797.—In the following extract, the unpublished portion is printed in italics:—) 2 day 18 attended the Second days morning meeting of Ministers and Elders, and in the evening we attended a meeting of young women who had formed themselves into a Society for the benevolent purposes of relieving the poor, sick, and aged, of their own sex in this City. We attended by request, and several of their parents were also with them, and this evening the Mayor of the City & his wife happened to attend this meeting on some business appertaining to the relief of the poor, there were present about thirty of the members of the society. After they had gone through with the evenings business, a solemn pause took place, and this little meeting was eminently owned with the overshadowing of divine good greatly to the encouragement of the Children in their present arduous undertaking and the goodly & benevolent Mayor and his Wife also rejoiced that they happened to be there at that time, the opportunity concluded with solemn prayer and supplication, and we went on our way rejoicing.

(Eighth Month, 1800. The following account of a visit to Ury is worthy of being given in full. A comparison of the printed Journal with the manuscript account will reveal the hitherto unpublished portions, which are here indicated by italics:—) 4 day 27 we sat out back again towards Edinburgh . . . and met Samuel Smith at Aberdeen the same day, and we went on to Stone Haven that evening and lodged at an Inn, and next morning we went to see Robert Barclay at Ury, he had three sisters with him one of which lately married and her husband there at that time who was a Lawyer, and also a young Clergyman who had been the Tutor to some of the children Robert was only just of age, I think they told us there was one younger Brother who was somewhere at school who we did not see, these young people received us very kindly with whom we breakfasted, and after walking in the garden a while which is beautifully situated on a lively running stream of water, and cultivated in great perfection, we returned to the House which they say is the same that the Apologist lived in, it is a large Stone Building, in which still remains the study wherein the Apology was written which is now a Library, after we had viewed sundry of that ancient good man's Relics we proposed a religious opportunity with these young people who had neither father nor mother living, which they acceded to, the aforesaid Lawyer, Clergyman also present, this opportunity was much to the relief of my mind and I hope will be remembered to profit by some if not all of these young people, Robert in particular was much broken and melted into tears, and when the opportunity was over importuned us to spend the day with them, and when we let him know that our engagements would not admit of it, himself and the aforesaid Lawyer walked with us near a mile and seemed loth to part with us taking their leaves of us in a very affectionate manner O! May the lives and Testimonies of those eminent instruments and faithful servants of God in their day "like the Blood of Righteous Abel tho' dead, yet continue to do so to speak", so after generations in general, and to their own posterities in particular, that they may be stirred up and excited to follow them as they followed Christ.

A GLIMPSE OF SERMAIZE.

LOUIS S. GANNETT.

Two nights at Sermaize meant more to me than any two nights in months. Both were spent indulging in pre-war luxuries—the kind of things we had forgotten existed since we came to France. One night I slept twelve hours; and the other night we wrangled and argued the problem of the universe long past midnight.

There is a rare crowd of talkers at Sermaize and they gather for the week-ends. After a week in a peasant's cottage threshing wheat or driving cars or carrying bedding, they gather to settle what statesmen have failed to solve, they dissect the organization of society and reconstruct it as it should be reconstructed—and each man differently from his neighbor; and then they mount to the dissection of each other's reconstructions.

Capitalism and Socialism, war and peace, trade unions, guilds, the decline of art, the evils of industrialism, the Gospel of efficiency, vegetarianism—all these are argued. And the group about the iron stove finally broke up at Birrell's dictum: that we would believe in vivisection if only it could be of dogs, by dogs, and for dogs!

When men toil with their hands for six days of the week, these seemingly sterile battles of the mind at the week-end are sorely needed.

Sermaize is the heart of the Friends' work in France. It was at Sermaize that it started; people have gone out from Sermaize to found new équipes all over France.

Emergency work no longer characterizes Sermaize. There are gardens about the little brown red-tiled houses which the English Friends erected among heaps of stones two or three years ago; sheds have been built up behind. More than that, new brick houses are being built by the people of Sermaize themselves; piles of fresh brick line the roadway and lean against the ragged remnants of old ruins. The resurrection of Sermaize has begun; its people have beds and blankets now, and the relief work has correspondingly lessened. Agricultural work continues as it must continue until the men come back from the trenches to thresh their own wheat. Early each week all through the winter half a dozen pairs of men set out to nearby villages to thresh the farmers' barns. They lived with the peasants until the week-end, and then came home to Sermaize. Over a thousand tons of grain they threshed, which but for them might have rotted. When Spring came, and it comes early in France, they started plowing.

Health is the key-word at Sermaize to-day, as it is everywhere in France where the first hectic emergency demands for beds and clothes and shelter have been met. Almost doctorless for three years, the peace-time civil hospitals requisitioned for military use and the local doctors called to military stations, the country about Sermaize is now being netted in a medical system.

Behind the Friends' headquarters in the old hotel outside the town at La Source is a little twenty-bed hospital in wooden barracks, such as are put up for returning refugees. It has been there for three years, staffed by the English; but to-day there is a larger hospital at the other end of the town. Dr. Babbitt's Château Hospital. It is the headquarters of the Friends' medical work in the Eastern Marne and the western Meuse.

Dr. Babbitt's energy and enthusiasm have turned a bare château battered by use as a military barracks into a bustling American-style hospital, every crack and cranny utilized, and plans have been laid for its extension in barracks to be built on the lawn and in the kitchen garden.

Surgical cases flow in and out of his hospital at an astonishing rate. They come in from over a score of towns and villages scattered over the Marne and Meuse; and, as soon as they can be moved, they pass on from the Château to the convalescent hospitals at La Source and at Bettancourt, once a children's home. The children have gone on to a new home at St. Remy-en-Bouzemont.

Meanwhile Dr. Earp, once doctor at Sermaize, has moved up into the new Verdun region and opened his headquarters at Auzeville, whence he returns for the week-end confabs, stopping on the way at Bar-le-Duc, and at Charmont, where Frances Ferris presides over the destinies of a dozen old refugee women.

At the other end of the Marne is the famous Maternité, proud of its six hundred odd babies born and its innumerable mothers cared for; and halfway between is Vitry, where Dr. Heard, coming from Chalons, holds a weekly clinic, and where the ladies have re-opened an équipe for relief work with refugees, selling furniture and helping the women to do embroidery.

But the Château at Sermaize is the bee-hive of the whole medical system. The nurses are crowded into the concierge's quarters; the doctors live in the old study; some of the men crowd into what were once stables. The sunny white operating-room on the second floor gives no hint of the frowsy red burlap that once covered its walls; the wards, where once stood canopied bedsteads, are now lined with hospital cots. Three rooms on the ground floor are used as wards, four upstairs. When running water and electricity are generally installed, the third floor will be filled, and Dr. Babbitt's enthusiastic dreams seem to stretch on into a forest of barracks. The queer thing about his dreams is that they very often come to pass in daylight.

A hospital where the patients talk only French and the doctors and many of the nurses only English may seem difficult from overseas, but the situation is being reversed these days in many a French military hospital behind the battle-front. Dr. Babbitt has evolved a lingo of his own. It is absolutely verbless; it has weird stretches of neighborly nouns, but the patients understand it! Or something in the doctor's smile and gestures carries the message, and they answer in torrents of French. And here and there a word gives the clue, and the doctor replies, and all are very good friends.

Club feet, hair lips, tuberculous knees, hopeless cancer cases, hip abscesses, sometimes from shell wounds, broken limbs, tonsils, adenoids, all sorts of surgical cases pass over the operating table, some of them with sesquipedalian names impossible to laymen. Salpingo-oophorectomy, cholecystostomy and paracentesis tympanti all came into one of Dr. Babbitt's weekly reports from the operating-rooms, the patients return and out to the wards, from the windows of which they look out on the fine old trees of the old château grounds, or across the road to the baby pine-forests.

La Source hospital has its barracks on a hillside; Bettancourt is in another château six or eight miles away. A great square château it is, surrounded by a moat and reached from the highroad through a great double avenue of trees. But French châteaux are usually more picturesque than hygienic. There is no running water, the water for the châteaux's baths are heated in great pots on the old-fashioned set-in kitchen stove, and poured into a rolling bath-tub.

The picture I carried away most vividly from Bettancourt was of a dozen bubbling, happy babies squatted on the floor before their one-foot-high dinner tables, and of their roar of welcome to the ladies in charge. It was just before the babies were sent to St. Remy to make room for convalescents from Dr. Babbitt's hospital.

Their faces were dirty and they had spilled mush on their bibs, but they unanimously invited kisses. I asked them their names, one answered Jean and another Marcelle, but one small roly-poly son of France insisted, with evident glee, in the nickname that the Englishwomen and Americans had given him, that his only name was "Patty."

THE LAST DAYS OF THOMAS PAINE, THE INFIDEL.

I may not omit recording here the death of Thomas Paine. A few days previous to my leaving home on my last religious visit, on hearing that he was ill, and in a very destitute condition, I went to see him, and found him in a wretched state; for he had been so neglected and forsaken by his pretended friends, that the common attentions to a sick man had been withheld from him. The skin of his body was in some places worn off, which greatly increased his sufferings. A nurse was provided for him, and some needful comforts supplied. He was mostly in a state of stupor; but something that had passed between us had made such an impression upon him, that some days after my departure he sent for me, and, on being told that I was gone from home, he sent for another friend. This induced a valuable young friend (Mary Roscoe), who had resided in my family, and continued at Greenwich during part of my absence, frequently to go and take some little refreshment suitable for an invalid, furnished by a neighbor. Once, when she was there, three of his deistical associates came to the door, and in a loud, unfeeling manner said, "Paine, it is said you are turning Christian, but we hope you will die as you have lived," and then went away. On which, turning to Mary Roscoe, he said, "You see what miserable comforters they are."

Once he asked her if she had ever read any of his writings. And, on being told that she had read but very little of them, he inquired what she thought of them, adding, "From such a one as you, I expect a correct answer." She told him that when very young his "Age of Reason" was put into her hands; but that the more she read in it, the more dark and distressed she felt, and she threw the book into the fire. "I wish all had done as you," he replied: "for if the devil has ever had any agency in any work, he has had it in my writing that book." When going to carry him some refreshment, she heard him uttering the language, "O Lord! Lord God!" or, "Lord Jesus! have mercy upon me!"

It is well known that during some weeks of his illness, when a little free from bodily pain, he wrote a great deal. This his nurse told me; and Mary Roscoe repeatedly saw him writing. If his companions in infidelity had found anything to support the idea that he continued on his death-bed to espouse their cause, would they not have eagerly published it? But not a word is said; there is a secrecy as to what became of these writings.—Selected.

IF.

If you can keep your head when all about you
Are losing theirs and blaming it on you;
If you can trust yourself when all men doubt you
And make allowance for the doubting, too;
If you can wait and not be tired of waiting,
Or being lied about, don't deal in lies,
Or being hated, don't give way to hating,
And yet don't look too good or talk too wise;
If you can dream and not make dreams your master,
If you can think and not make thoughts your aim;
If you can meet with triumph and disaster
And treat those two imposters just the same;
If you can bear to hear the truth you've spoken
Twisted by knaves to make a trap for fools,
Or watch the things you gave your life to, broken
And stoop and build them up with wornout tools;

If you can fill the unforgiving minute

With sixty seconds worth of distance run;
Yours is the earth and everything that's in it
And—what is more—you'll be a man, my son!

—RUDYARD KIPLING.

IF.

(From a woman's point of view.)

If you can let your foot-free friends surprise you
When all your household wheels are out of gear,
If you can get a meal when all about you
Are piled with things there wasn't time to clear,
If you can serve them simple things serenely
Without a word about the plight you're in,
And while you say unto your soul, "be seely,"
And, in the bosom fight that follows, win—

If you can love your child with all that's in you,
Yet firmly say the word that must be said,
Face tearful eyes and never let them daunt you,
And in the din that follows, keep your head;
If you know life, yet thrust your children in it
Because you see that God, who made the gale,
To vanquish sin gave unto man the spirit,
Just as to fight headwinds he gave the sail,—

If you can win respect from those who serve you,
And run your home, and not let it run you;
If you can face details nor let them dwarf you
And keep your outlook broad, your vision true;
If you can let your sands of time run daily
Into a headlong stream of endless tasks,
And do the things you hate and do them gladly,
Because to serve is all the joy love asks,—

If you can do, without the dust of doing,
And toiling, keep your soul and body fine,
If you can right the words and deeds you're ruing,
And lean on love yet not become a vine;
If you can be a worthy wife and mother
And wisely meet all this shall bring to you,—
Fear not to share the burdens of your brother
What time shall ask, that, Woman, you can do!

—JANE DOWLING FOOTER.

OUT of the chaos, over fields of strife,
Truth shall arise triumphant into life.
Nature that God bestows is perfect still,
'Tis mortal mind that misconceives His will.
'Was not by carnal might His works were made,
And His creation never needs its aid.
Its strength is in the Power of Love Divine,
On such alone shall find glory shine.
And all who seek its source shall find therein,
"One touch of Nature makes the whole world kin."

—EDWARD McCHEANE.

THE YOUNG FRIENDS' SUPPLEMENT

Vol. 1.

FIFTH-DAY, FIFTH MONTH 16, 1918.

No. 3.

THE YOUNG FRIENDS' SUPPLEMENT.

A MONTHLY SUPPLEMENT TO THE FRIEND,
DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF YOUNG FRIENDS.

Editor—EDWARD W. MARSHALL.

Associate Editors.

JANE MOON SNIPES

IRVIN C. POLEY

EDITH STRATTON

ALICE TRIMBLE

EDITOR'S ADDRESS—20 SOUTH TWELFTH STREET, PHILADELPHIA.

PUBLISHED UNDER THE AUSPICES OF
THE PHILADELPHIA YOUNG FRIENDS' COMMITTEE.

THE SPIRIT OF THE AMERICAN C. O.

Khaki uniforms everywhere in sight around the camp—thousands of them. At one side a C. O. in an old blue knock-about suit, conspicuous because of his civilian attire. What heavy odds it seems, one man against a gigantic war machine.

But the typical Quaker C. O. stands firm. He has the unshakable conviction that he is following the only course possible to a true Christian, and is willing to abide by the consequences. Although he is subjected to threats, indignities, repeated imprisonment in the guard-house and sometimes to rough usage, he does not pose as a martyr, he prefers to have us think that he is getting along pretty well. He shows us the bright side of the picture and glosses over the rest by emphasizing its humorous features. This C. O. is no weakling, he is a real man.

The test to which he has been put has strengthened him. His convictions against war have been deepened by his experiences. He has openly acknowledged by his stand that he is a follower of Christ, and he is being repaid. There is a light in his eye that reflects the unbounded joy in his heart.

A new type of Quaker is being evolved in him. He has time for a certain amount of meditation and he thinks much about matters to which formerly he gave little thought. He is thrown with other C. O.'s, including men of other religious denominations, Socialists and deep thinkers on various subjects, and he inevitably must radically change his point of view in many matters. He becomes more Socialistic and yearns to see the Christian Church arouse itself from its lethargic attitude toward the Socialistic program and take its rightful place as a leader in far-reaching social reform. The C. O. will indeed be a different type of Quaker when he returns home.

The typical C. O. is usually uncomplaining, and the only complaint voiced by any C. O. when some Friends recently visited an Eastern camp was as follows:

"The Friends back home ought to know how hard they make it for us when any of them don't stick up to their testimony against all wars. The Captain comes to us and says, 'What's the use of holding out any longer? All the Quakers are supporting the war, they aren't opposed to war any more. You're all alone in your stand. What's the use of holding out?' And although we know he is not right it makes it that much harder for us."

E. W. M.

THE INSTINCT OF EXPANSION.

MAX I. REICH.

[The following paper was written in response to a request for a stimulating article of especial interest and importance to Young Friends.—Eds.]

The true church is no mere institution or organization, or an intricate ecclesiastical machine which only specially trained experts can manipulate. The church is a living organism, the very body of Christ, and His Spirit throbs in every part thereof.

The true church is a growing body. Growth is one of the tokens of life. All life, whether spiritual or natural, has at its heart the will to expand, the instinct to multiply itself.

When the pentecostal Spirit, the life of the glorified Christ, took possession of the infant church she instinctively felt the new power to be an aggressive force, a "missionary" Spirit. The book of Acts shows how one wave of expansion followed another. Beginning (1) at Jerusalem, the waves of Divine influence from the spiritual presence of the Lord reached (2) Samaria; then (3) Syria and Antioch; then (4) Asia Minor; then (5) Greece in Europe; and finally (6) Rome, the capital of the world. Six ever-increasing waves of life from Heaven flowing into and through the open channels of surrendered lives! And there was a seventh under contemplation, the most wonderful wave of all, meant to reach "the uttermost parts of the earth." But we have no record of it in the book of Acts. The story is not finished yet.

How it thrills us to discover the record is incomplete! Does our "Leader and Commander" call this generation of the disciples, "given to Him out of the world" for His work, to finish what has been so gloriously begun? Or must he appear like the man in the parable whom his neighbors mocked because he began to build but was not able to finish? Or need we lament with Alexander that there are no more worlds left to conquer, that there is no more scope for fresh adventure and heroic achievement worthy to be recorded in the unfinished book of Acts?

It must, of course, never be forgotten that God has a greater work in us than by us; and that the latter need not mean public preaching. There are gifts differing, though a manifestation of the Spirit be given to all. Let us safeguard the instinct of expansion lest it become creaturely activity, or break out into strange fire. But with this caution on our souls it still remains New Testament teaching which sets the seal of confirmation on the teaching of the inward Light since both proceed from one Spirit, that it is the duty of the whole church to make known a whole Christ to the whole world.

Just as there was a Divine preparation of the world for Christ when "in the fulness of the time," He appeared, so, looking with larger eyes at the present movements which are shaking and reshaping our modern world, we can trace through the confusion of the moment a Divine purpose preparing the race for another move forward of the Kingdom of God. The death-throes of the old order are the birth-pangs of the new. Above the war of battle, the boom of guns and the shoutings of them that strive for the mastery, can we not catch the song of hope herald angels singing announcing the breaking of a new day?

It has been said of the lady Guyon that "it may yet be seen, when the secrets of world-history are opened up, that her role as forerunner of the moral and spiritual upheaval, which politically presents itself as the French revolution, was no unimportant one. The spiritual light which shone out from her through the darkness of France was not extinguished by her persecution; and it may well be that to the latent unperceived working of that Divine influence of which for a time she was a channel, we owe the profound change which distinguishes modern Europe from its preceding ages. Perhaps the dying monk was not in error when he hailed the overthrow of the altar at whose foot he was killed by the preachers of Liberté, Egalité, et Fraternité, as the opening of the Spirit's reign he had so long sighed for."

So it will be found again, I feel sure. Much may perish in the present cataclysm; but the hidden seed that faithful witnesses have kept alive in the earth in their day and generation will survive and flourish and bear fruit abundantly. For the religion of the Spirit must yet prevail over the earth, even as the waters cover the sea.

With such a prospect we will have to recover the lost instinct of expansion. Our public testimony must ring out again the conquering note. We must put off our silver slippers and be something else than a recent critic described our Society: "A highly respectable but harmless body of spiritual aristocrats." If we wait in creaturely silence on and for the Spirit, we will find Him not only a purifying, but also an energizing fire; not only a Spirit of holiness, but of expansion also. Let us pay the price our worthy predecessors paid, and we will be clothed with the same power that carried them out.

YOUTHFUL INTOLERANCE.

EDITH STRATTON.

Some months ago I decided that the world was an extremely bad place to live in. Not that I thought a perfect world would be interesting or stimulating to one at my particular stage of development, but I did think it would be interesting and stimulating to see certain definite efforts of reform finding substantial and visible fulfilment. Quite the reverse was apparent. The world was plainly stupid and depraved to have traveled through space so many aeons and to arrive only here! It was inconceivable that generations of people could have lived with a passion for righteousness burning within them and land civilization in such a jungle of unrighteousness.

At this point of pessimism a little phrase that I had read some months before tumbled out of a dusty mental pigeon-hole and labeled my great bitterness of spirit, YOUTHFUL INTOLERANCE. I have since discovered "a way out" which I want to share with some other enthusiasts, old or young, who are quite disconcerted by the present spectacle of the world.

Youthful intolerance is due perhaps chiefly to two misconceptions. The first is this: Appearances at the present time are peculiarly misleading. Whereas the world is more fundamentally askew than we thought, it may not be so far askew as it looks. The waters are troubled; the depths are stirred; the worst is apparent: "the hour has come." It is very revealing—this muddled tumultuous present. The ugly skeleton of our social disorder fills us with dismay. The jaw-bones; the grinning irony and the banality of the way of life we have hitherto walked. Cynics are not wanting to point out the fatalism and the misanthropy of it all. Cold comfort they give us with their superficial facts!

What we need is not the cynic pointing to the skeleton, but God to clothe with flesh and blood; to animate with miraculous life; to illuminate with the torch of soul, as "in the beginning." Here indeed is the raw material of a luminous humanity; here stands the city with its skeleton frame "whose builder and maker is God." We have chosen the way of death instead of the way of life—that is all; and God would not abandon us to that fatal choice. He has stabbed "our spirits broad awake."

Secondly, we have exaggerated the speed of human progress. We lack, as Graham Taylor has said, "the geologic time-sense." The slow evolution of the centuries speaks eloquently of the eternal patience of God to whom a "thousand years are as one day." We would achieve in a trice; we would take the short-cut to power; we would storm Heaven's gate by violence. We feel the world will never be reformed unless we leap into the breach and achieve to-morrow. In our reforms of national and personal life we would use carbolic acid; we shoot; we release poisonous gases; we submarine; we kill the error stark dead. Sunshine purifies, but sunshine is too slow, too mild, too pacifist.

Baffled and desperate we come out under the everlasting stars some quiet night and feel the vastness of the world of God. When we can view our own lives with detachment, our sense of proportion awakens and we feel Carlyle's humor as he contrasts our puny strivings with the great processes of nature.

"Thousands of human generations, all as noisy as our own, have been swallowed up of Time, and there remains no wreck of them any more; and Arcturus and Orion and Sirius and the Pleiades are still shining in their courses, clear and young, as when the Shepherd first noted them in the plain of Shinar.

Pshaw! what is this paltry little dog-cage of an earth; what art thou that stittest whining there?"*

To stop there would mean inaction. There is much to be achieved—too much for breathless haste. We must drop into a dog-trot for a long Marathon race of progress; we must let the evil die of neglect; we must help the good to develop. As some one in a recent number of The Venturer has beautifully said:

"All the iron frost and snow failed to strip from some of the trees the dead dark leaves of last year, but when the sap of spring, the new life, surged into the branches, the withered leaves fell of themselves. That is precisely how I feel the evils of our world must be overcome. Not by denunciation, by plucking up the tares, by smashing the dead branches but by the surge of the new love which bursts into leaf and flower everywhere."

Jesus Christ was tempted with impatience, "Cast thyself down from the temple." It would be an immediate proclamation to a superstitious folk. Instead of that the slow process of friendship through struggling years to win even unstable adherents. The self-restraint of the choice; the Divine patience; the faith in the method of God as the way of life! He was young and not intolerant, luminous with the passion for righteousness but not consumed by it; home-sick for the city of God, but stooping to build it with the stones "which the builders rejected." He is the tonic for our premature climaxes, our feverish despairs, our violent arraignment, our human impatience.

To His nation dominated and oppressed by Roman militarism He gave the astonishing news: "The Kingdom of Heaven is at hand." It is still at hand—within more people, seeking larger and larger applications to human society. Is it still such a venture of faith to "believe the good news?" To his countrymen, clamorous for a magical, superimposed Messianic Kingdom. He taught the conception of a spiritual Kingdom that is like a mustard seed, a grain of wheat, a lump of yeast growing and expanding because of the irresistible life within.

The world is potentially good, but very wayward and needy. It calls for men who believe in the "good news" of the Kingdom of God in spite of the present jungle; men who will patiently build it stone by stone under the Master Builder. Youthful intolerance sees the goal, let it guide itself for the long march.

"And long the way appears which seemed so short

To the less practised eye of sanguine youth;

And high the mountain tops, in cloudy air,

The mountain tops where is the throne of truth,

Tops in life's morning-sun so bright and bare!"

—MATHIAS ARNOLD.

EVEN WORSE.—[Extract from a recent letter to an Associate Editor.—Eds.]

"We had a wonderful address last evening by Harry Ward of Boston College of Religion. He is rather Socialistic in viewpoint. When Doctor Hobbs asked him if we was a Socialist he said: 'I am worse, I am a Christian.'"

*Sartor Resartus, Chapter xviii.

THE REFLECTIONS OF A "C. O." ON THE DEEPER CAUSES OF THE WAR.

There are certain advantages to be derived from life in a detention camp, and not the least of them is the opportunity it affords to enjoy something of the monastic seclusion. One is certain of something to eat and a place to sleep, and one may loaf with a clear conscience. But this loafing is physical rather than mental or spiritual, for the mind must needs reflect upon the deeper causes that have brought us here, and the heart seek for a fuller spiritual insight and understanding. Why has a situation such as this arisen and can a repetition of it be prevented? What is wrong with Christianity? What is wrong with Christians? What is the remedy? No effort is going to be made to answer these questions, but only to suggest some ideas that may help to a clearer understanding of the problem, and thus aid in its solution.

What is wrong with our application of Christianity? If, for the purpose of argument, we define Christianity as the interpretation which men have put upon the life of Christ, as revealed in the teaching of the Church and the conduct of church members, it is not fair to say that the Church has laid greater stress upon individual righteousness and individual salvation, than upon social justice and social regeneration? Too often has the Church striven to secure for its members a "mansion in the skies," rather than to make "justice run down as waters and righteousness as a mighty stream." Christianity has been individual rather than social in its content, and the result is that we have learned to live good, clean, decent individual lives, but we find the practice of social justice fraught with unsuspected difficulties. We had thought that individual righteousness must issue in social righteousness, and we are learning that social righteousness can only be attained by co-operation and united effort. We are just now learning that the answer to the old question, "Am I my brother's keeper?" is "Thou art thy brother's keeper." Righteousness is no longer to be found in the monastery but in the forum, and, therefore, we must lay greater stress upon social ethics as an integral part of the Christian religion.

What is wrong with the Christians? Possibly one of the most unfortunate characteristics of Christians is traditional dogmatism. No genuine progress can be made so long as men assume that certain propositions must be believed and not investigated. Doubt is not a sin, it is an indication of life, and the doubter should be encouraged and be given full freedom for investigation that he may learn the truth. Belief in the literal inspiration of the Scripture, the infallibility of the Bible, and the sacrificial merit of Christ must be subjected to a close and searching examination. We must search for the deeper truth—

"The veritas that lurks beneath
The letters unproliferate sheath."

The individualism of the Church's teaching, the stress laid upon personal salvation has made men fear to look closely into their creeds, and, therefore, in religion they have declined to make use of the same critical and scientific methods which they apply to all other activities, yet the sincere Christian feels that somehow his creed is not meeting the needs of the time, and he feels more or less at sea. He needs to rid himself of his dogmatism, his credulity and blind faith, and come into the open to find the old truth in a new garb more in sympathy with the times.

In so far as the Christian has failed to apply his common sense to his religion he has allowed his religion to become subordinated to ritualistic forms and dogmatic beliefs "which stifle religion under the pretext of protecting it." We need a religion emancipated from the servitude to human opinion, a spiritual life based upon direct communion with the Heavenly Father.

We must also seek to rid ourselves of certain presuppositions as to how God works and how He does not work. We must seek for a clearer understanding of the evolutionary method of social regeneration, and lay less stress upon the idea of a cataclysmic establishment of the Kingdom of God. We must remember that God has need of us, that it is through us that He works; we must find a deeper meaning in Christ's words, "knock and it shall be opened unto you."

As a result of the teaching of the Church it is not strange that the Christian thinks of Christ as a personal Saviour rather than as the Saviour of the World. We must seek for a clearer understanding of the social teaching of Jesus.

And lastly, we must seek to see in the life of Christ a revelation of the sort of life God wants His true children to live. We must see in the words, "I am the Way, the Truth and the Life," something more than a justification for the mechanical doctrine of the atonement. We must see in them a call to the sort of life Christ demonstrated. Indeed must we not think of Christ less as a blood sacrifice and more as a life example?

What is the remedy? Henry S. Nash has said: "The way of the Scripture, the way of light, is not the road of abstract reasoning, but the road of the cross." "The road of the cross" is the true Christian road, it is the path the Master trod, it is the way His followers must choose. But we must not fail to use all our God-given faculties as we follow the Master's leading. We need a rational application of a spiritual Christianity, an application in harmony with the characteristic intellectual life of our day. The foundation of our new faith must be the Inner Light, the enlightened conscience, the direct communion between the conscience and the Heavenly Father. But we must use all possible means for enlightening the conscience. The mind and the intellect must become the servants of the heart; they, too, must be consecrated to the search for truth.

In our search for truth we must take into account our own experience and the experience of the race. It must be our resolute purpose to see things exactly as they are and to report what we have seen without fear or favor. We must strive to attain a measure of wisdom.

We must subject the Scriptures to a searching examination. We must make use of the method of historical criticism of the Bible that we may reach the original meanings of the Scripture. A devoted scholar has said, "Criticism will show itself to be the defense of the rights of Holy Scripture, the process through which God is emancipating His word from servitude to human opinion." And so our search for truth must leave no stone unturned, no method untried.

"Religion is pure and genuine only where its single aim is ethical conduct, and in like manner morality is deep, true, only when its inner motive power is religion," says Marti. We must seek for a deeper insight into the ethics of Christianity. After all is not a man's relationship to God revealed in his relationship to his fellows? We are called to a ministry of demonstration and we must seek how best to fulfil our mission.

Last of all we must have faith. Having found the truth we must trust it. We must be loyal to our ideal at all hazards and at all cost. It is no true faith which does not find expression in practice, nor true devotion which does not seek opportunities for service—service which flows from the impulse of the heart. Our ministry of demonstration calls for a supreme exhibition of faith, and we must give it or fail. We face a great crisis, and we must meet it with still greater faith. We must seek courage that comes from communion with the Father—the confidence that we are on the side of the "stars in their courses."

J. HOWARD BRANSON.

CAMP MEADE, MD.

SOWER DIVINE.

Sow the good seed in me;
Seed for eternity.
'Tis a rough, barren soil,
Yet by Thy care and toil
Make it a fruitful field,
An hundred-fold to yield.
Sower Divine!
Plow up this heart of mine.

—BONAR.

RESIGNATION OF A. DOUGLAS OLIVER

[The following letter to one of the Editors tells its own story. We are very sorry to lose A. Douglas Oliver from our Board, but cannot begrudge him to the splendid work he is about to undertake. He takes with him our sincere wishes for a satisfying period of service and a safe return home. —Eds.]

"Owing to the fact that I have been called for work with the British Ambulance Unit, and hope to get away before too long, I will have to hand in my resignation, and wish you the best possible success for the work which you have started so well. I only wish I could go on with you, doing my small bit.

"Very sincerely,
"A. DOUGLAS OLIVER."

SUPPLEMENT EDITORIAL BOARD.

Apologies are odious and the junior Editorial Board offers none. However, for a sympathetic and we trust indulgent audience, it announces two events of the past month that have tended to divert its forces. In addition to giving to foreign relief service, its instigator of collegiate "news," as elsewhere noted, it has "given in marriage" its business manager. He who runs may read. May the colleges let flow and may the subscriptions pour in to THE YOUNG FRIENDS SUPPLEMENT, 20 S. Twelfth Street.—[THE EDITORS.]

A NOTE ON THE PLATFORM OF THE BRITISH LABOR PARTY.

Amid the confusion of territorial claims and counter claims, two objects emerge as the principal purposes of the warring nations: international organization and social reconstruction. The first is one with which Friends generally sympathize, though perhaps a considerable number discountenance any provision for force in such an organization. The second object, merely a by-product of the war, threatens to assume the leading place, if not in the peace conference, certainly after it.

In the platform of the British Labor Party this subject of social reconstruction finds one of its most significant and comprehensive statements, and perhaps an outline may serve to remind those who know the platform and to move others to examine it in detail. In the new program the fundamental principle is co-operation rather than competition. In the light of this principle, the party, under the metaphor of the "highway of the world," proposes to reconstruct, first the House of the British Empire and then the Street of Tomorrow.

The four pillars of the new structure are:

The Universal Enforcement of the National Minimum, aiming to secure "to all, in good and bad times alike, all the requisites of healthy life and worthy citizenship."

The Democratic Control of Industry, in which the private capitalist is eliminated, and such of the war measures as have proved effective are continued in time of peace;

A Revolution in National Finance, directed toward meeting the war debt and current expenses by heavily graduated assessments on fortunes and incomes;

The Use of the Surplus for the Common Good, including public provision for the sick and infirm, for the promotion of scientific study, of music, literature and the fine arts.

Passing to the street of Tomorrow and discussing World Policy, the platform repudiates both dominating imperialism and selfish non-interventionism. It maintains three fundamentals: the corporate duties of one nation to another; the moral claims of non-adult races; and friendly co-operation among the peoples of the world. Applying those fundamentals to the British Empire, which it reconstitutes under the name of Britannic Alliance, the party speaks for local autonomy, and at the same time for a central council to recommend measures to the governments of the several states. To other nations: the party announces its repudiation of national aggrandizement at their expense, of economic wars and secret diplomacy, and it insists that with the treaty of peace must come the establishment of a league of nations. The conclusion is a plea for both good will and the scientific attitude in meeting the problem of human relations, and a resolve that the Labor Party will always mention its fundamental principle of co-operation, though it may be led by the results of scientific study to revise the items of its program from time to time.

So broad and complete an analysis of the problem of reconstruction must come home with peculiar force to those who have been concerned with the possibilities of a similar situation in our own country, and, however revolutionary the details may appear, there can be no question of the responsibility of those who profess the Christian faith to examine without prejudice the whole problem. Friends particularly, both those who follow the traditional view of non-resistance, and those who see in the present war a crusade for the cause of a just and permanent international order, cannot afford to overlook the essential appeal of documents like this platform or to withhold their active aid in a movement which is making its appeal even among those who have never sympathized with the pacifist. The Law of Love which Jesus Christ taught was by His example a basis for individual social relations, and no follower of His should stress that law in international relations only, resting content to accept in private life the fruits of a social order which contains in it the seeds of private and corporate dissension. That the Society of Friends as a body is alive to the crisis is evidenced by the cordial reception of the report of the Social Order Committee, with its ringing recall to the spirit of the Quaker pioneer. In this time of searching of hearts, the Society of Friends will do well if, obeying that call, it reconsecrates itself, in the words of John Woolman, to the idea that "to labor for a perfect redemption from the spirit of oppression is the great business of the whole family of Christ in this world."

HARRY A. DOMINOVICH.

OUR SPIRITUAL TASK.*

A new spirit is stirring in the hearts of men. President Wilson in his wonderful message of last Fall said, "You catch with me the voices of humanity that are in the air. They grow more audible, more articulate, more persuasive and they come from the hearts of men everywhere." In a world at war the whole strata and sub-strata of society is being shaken. We are all more or less aware that "economic and social forces are being released upon the world, whose effect no political seer dare venture or conjecture." We are conscious that old things are passing away and that much is to become new. What is to be our part and the part of the religious society to which we belong in the building of a better democracy?

In the past the Society of Friends has been among the first to champion many great moral causes. We have labored for liberty of conscience, for the abolition of human slavery, for the prohibition of the liquor traffic, for international peace, for the uplift and education of the Negro and for the just treatment of the North American Indian.

For some reason, however, we have as a corporate body shown no active interest in some of the great movements of our time for social betterment. The prevention of child labor, the abolition of the slums, the relation of poverty to vice, the broader questions of social and industrial justice are matters that perhaps have claimed the attention of individual members, but in which as a religious society we have had no part.

The time has now come when these problems should be of paramount interest to us. If we are to prepare ourselves for an intelligent and constructive share in the social reorgan-zation toward which many are looking, we must seriously consider present conditions and how they may be changed into a more Christlike order of society.

*A Message from the Social Order Committee, delivered at the Annual Young Friends' Conference.

In this time of world upheaval, John Woolman's statement that the seeds of war may be found in our social order, has for us a new meaning. We are beginning at last to realize that competition and commercial rivalry within the nation engender international rivalry and dissensions; that personal selfishness becomes group selfishness and works out into national selfishness; that class wars and struggles between capital and labor breed the spirit of strife in the hearts of men. In order to abolish war we are commencing to understand that we must remove the underlying causes of war.

I am here to-day on behalf of the Social Order Committee of our Yearly Meeting to urge the need that all of us must feel, the serious study of these great questions.

If during the coming year Round Table groups would consider the overshadowing problem of creating an order of society organized to accord with the social teachings of Jesus Christ, we may be sure that such a program will at least bear fruit in our own hearts and perhaps help wisely to direct the course of our religious Society in the momentous days that are to come. A clear realization of the un-Christlike condition of things as they are will bring to us a new vision for the future, so that with understanding hearts we may pray more fervently than ever before, "Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven."

HENRY TATNALL BROWN.

WESTTOWN AND THE YOUNG FRIENDS' MOVEMENT.

[NOTE.—This and the following article are reports written by the students who spoke on behalf of the student bodies at Westtown at a joint collection called to consider the relationship of Westtown and the Young Friends' Movement. We hope to print later details of the connection yet to be worked out.—Eds.]

Fourth Month 28, 1918, Representatives from the Young Friends' Executive Committee visited Westtown and explained the hopes and purposes of this movement to the students in evening collection. Robert Yarnall, Frances Elkinton, Samuel Smedley, Edith Stratton and Vincent Nicholson gave various phases of it and its reference to the religious life of young people, just graduating from school or college. Two members of the Senior class gave reasons for their interest in this Young Friends' Movement.

After this meeting many of the older boys met Robert Yarnall and the other men of the Committee. The question of the relation of Westtown to the Young Friends' Movement was informally discussed. Much interest was shown and action tending to some definite purpose is soon to be taken. Representatives from the boys to the Executive Committee will probably be chosen. A number of western Friends, waiting to sail for France, added encouragement. Several who had attended last year's conference at Cedar Lake, encouraged the boys to attend this year's conference which is to be at Richmond, Indiana. From the amount of interest shown it was certain that the Westtown boys were willing and anxious to do their share in this work.

JOSIAH RUSSELL.

MEDIA FELLOWSHIP.

In these days when so much is said to us about sacrifice we all thrill with the thought of getting out of school and launching our little bark in the great sea of service.

During the winter we have been hearing lectures and talks on such subjects as, "What it Means to be a Friend," "What Friends Should Stand for," and what they are standing for in military camps and as missionaries and reconstruction workers. Many of us have felt a vital interest in all these things and have had a vague feeling that some day we would be able to show that we, too, are loyal Friends. Meanwhile we have lived more or less, to ourselves, striving with our community problems and giving what seemed to us, only a very small fraction of our energy and attention to outside conditions. There has seemed to be a gap between our school life and the life of service which we wish to grow into; an intangible "something" which has been holding us aloof from those just a little older than we are and who are doing the work.

It was in this state of mind that the Young Friends' Committee found us on the twenty-eighth of Fourth Month, when they came out to talk over the situation and its possibilities. Four members of the Young Friends' Committee and a member of the Five Years' Meeting presented the Young Friends' movement briefly in its different phases to the boys and girls in joint collection. These talks seemed to supply that "something" which we had lacked and the barrier was broken between us.

In a parlor meeting after collection the most interested girls helped to form a plan by which our part of the Young Friends' Movement here at Westtown can be vitally connected with the larger movement. This plan has not been fully developed in the Student body yet, but it will be a means by which we hope to fill up the gap after school.

RUTH THORP.

SIDELIGHTS ON A FELLOWSHIP GROUP.

"Well, it sounds like a good idea, let's try it. Everybody come around to our house this evening and we'll talk it over."

That was the way it began. And because, in our talk that night, we hit on one or two points which have come to be cornerstones of our Fellowship, I am writing this in the hope that our experience may help some group that is just starting.

Two ideas were particularly emphasized. "We want this to be a place where we can feel perfectly free to talk over the things that bother us," we said. The result was that we chose our leaders from our own group instead of asking some prominent person to come to speak to us, for we believed that the presence of an outsider would tend to check a great deal of discussion and honest expression of opinion. Besides we all needed the practice in leadership. And in connection with this, we decided that only the leader should make any formal preparation for the meeting. Each week the topic for the next meeting was announced and each person thought about it as much as he could during the week, but there were no papers written or speeches planned, the expression was always spontaneous.

But more important than the mechanical part of the meeting has been the devotional silence at the end. We have tried to make it "a little Friends' meeting," where those who felt called might speak and many helpful, earnest prayers have been uttered during the year. It is this little time for group worship which, more than all of our discussions, has brought us together and given us a united purpose. There is no fellowship as close as the fellowship of silent waiting before God.

I wish that I could tell you about some of the stimulating meetings that we have had and the range of the topics discussed. "The things that have bothered us" have been numerous and varied. This winter changed a little to take in a group of meetings on "the ministry," planned by the Quarterly Meeting conference committee, but even in these we preserved our freedom of speech and felt that our devotionals were materially strengthened. From all of our meetings we have gained a fresh vision of the life of service that is waiting for each of us.

ALICE TRIMBLE.

LEARN something from everyone with whom you come in contact. This is quite possible, for everyone knows something worth knowing better than you do. And nearly everyone is ready to impart knowledge to a willing listener.

HARMFUL DIVERSIONS.

I wonder if it is more of a trial to me than to others who hear our queries read each year that we cannot report more members clear of attending places of harmful diversion. If our forefathers saw fit to class theatres, operas and dances as harmful and places to be avoided, why do we of this generation pay so little respect to their opinion? Is it because we do not consider them harmful? Or is it because we do not look deeply enough into the reasons they were considered harmful, and find out for ourselves whether those same conditions still exist?

It is entirely natural that we need recreation, and most of us I suppose look for such recreation in some form of amusements whether it be healthy sports, lectures, musical entertainments, movies or something else which answers our individual tastes.

How shall we choose between the variety of such amusement which is offered for us to choose from. We in the country have less to choose from, but that does not mean that we are not tempted and are occasionally found in the audience of entertainment companies of questionable character. I have attended for the past few winters a series of entertainments given in a neighboring town, and I did so because I felt that they should be encouraged, especially since they were generally of an uplifting character. Had they been otherwise we could not have given them our support, and in their place a lower grade of entertainment might have been encouraged.

We are advised as often as the returning year to avoid those places where we cannot take our Heavenly Father with us, and I feel that we are not unmindful of such splendid counsel. However, we still cannot answer clear.

I should be glad if that query like one or two of the others which caused some comment in the sessions of the late Yearly Meeting might be altered so as to have a positive rather than a negative interpretation. If we are to develop the class of Christian men and women which I know we most desire, we will choose our amusements as we choose our education to develop us along those lines. We will ask ourselves not so much is this or that harmful, but does it tend to broaden our spiritual vision. If we find ourselves developing a preference for cheap "movie shows" or other light diversions to those of an educational nature, or if our time is so taken up with amusing ourselves that we have no time to think of others, it is high time we "looked well to our ways." If we are truly about our Master's business we could answer clear to a query whether we choose those amusements which tend to develop our Christian character.

BERTHA BALDERSTON.

COLORA, MD., Fourth Month 4, 1918.

A CALL TO THE ARMY OF GOD.

To all believers in the power of the weaponless, penniless Jesus there is a challenge. Look up from your brain-searching and money-seeking in order to help pick up the fallen. Look to Almighty God. Is He calling again for a handful who will go weaponless, penniless, with only Jesus' love in their hearts to be messengers for Him before Whom all the armies and leaders and rulers in this conflict must stand back?

SARAH BALDERSTON HARKER.

CONFERENCE NOTES.

THE WESTTOWN CONFERENCE, SIXTH MONTH 20 TO SIXTH MONTH 24, 1918.

Again we have the opportunity of attending a Westtown Conference. With the ever-increasing interest of young Friends in the Society and its problems, this promises to be a time of such deep spiritual awakening that none of us can afford to miss it. Realizing that this is a testing time for many of us and that we must answer the present challenge, as well as prepare ourselves for reconstruction, both spiritual and physical, at the close of the war, the Program Committee has tried to plan an inspirational week-end to fit our present needs. There is a great call for leaders who will consecrate themselves to a living Christianity. Think about it and see if they do not need the Conference. We need thy help here as well as afterwards. Be sure to reserve Sixth Month 20th-24th. The subjects to be discussed are:—The Challenge to the Church; How to use the Bible; Helps to Personal Religion; Christ, Our Leader; Our Quaker Peace Testimony Reconsidered; Faith in Spiritual Forces; The Trial of Our Faith in Wartime; and Christianity—The Only Hope of the World. Among the speakers are Norman M. Thomas, J. Harvey Barton, Clarence E. Pickett, Rufus M. Jones, Janet Payne Whitney and A. J. Muste.

For information and reservations, write to Marian E. Thatcher, Westtown, Pa.

Preparedness of spirit is essential for the success of a religious conference. Will thee not aid us and strengthen thyself, by sincere and earnest prayer, that this Conference may be blest by the power and presence of the Living Christ.

On behalf of the Young Friends' Committee.

THE NINTH ANNUAL SUMMER CONFERENCE FOR YOUNG FRIENDS, RICHMOND, EARLHAM COLLEGE, IND., SEVENTH MONTH 19th-20th.

Last year thirteen young people, representing officially eight of our Monthly Meetings, attended the Cedar Lake Conference. All the delegates are united in feeling that the Conference brought to them a fresh vision of the message and mission of Quakerism. To become acquainted with some of our Western Friends was a real benefit and privilege. A special opportunity for influence was given Philadelphia Young Friends in leading the morning Devotional Bible Classes. This leadership was much appreciated by those unused to our methods of worship and demonstrated the reality of Philadelphia Quakerism.

We feel that it is important for us now of all times to face together the problems in connection with the present world crisis and that a godly number should again attend the General Conference which is to be held Seventh Month 19th to 29th this year at Earlham College, Richmond, Ind.

The tentative daily program begins with the Morning Watch at 6:30 A. M., and closes with Vespers and an inspirational address at 7:30. Within these hours are classes for the study of the Bible, of Missions, of Quakerism, and of fundamental problems of Christianity; an Open Parliament before dinner and rest and recreation in the afternoon.

Circulars are to be had upon application to the General Secretary at 20 S. Twelfth Street, and further information will be gladly extended there or by any member of the Committee.

On behalf of the Young Friends' Committee,

HORACE D. WEBSTER,
BERTHA BALDERSTON,
EDITH THORP VAIL,
HELEN P. COOPER,
ELIZABETH THOMAS.

WOOLMAN SCHOOL SUMMER TERM, SEVENTH MONTH 1st TO EIGHTH MONTH 10th.

Among the fine opportunities for young Friends the coming Summer is the Summer Term of Woolman School, which offers six weeks of recreation, inspiration and instruction.

Situated as it is on the ridge above the valleys, with shady groves and orchard nearby, the School affords a pleasant retreat within easy reach of the city. Tennis and croquet on the grounds, rambles in the woods, boating on the Crum, and swimming in the College pool afford recreation according to one's inclination.

Inspiration comes from the "homey" friendly atmosphere of the School family, from new friendships, personal touch with the instructors, and the comradeship of study and play and worship—most of all from the spiritual stimulus and refreshment of the morning worship each day.

The instruction covers a wide range of those subjects which will help young Friends to render more effective service in First-day school, meeting and community. Courses are planned in Hebrew Prophecy, The Teachings of Jesus, Friends' History in the Nineteenth Century, Social Service, The Bible in the Schools, Internationalism, Missions, and First-day School Teaching for Children and Adolescents.

Full particulars can be had by addressing Woolman School, Swarthmore, Pa.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO YOU.

There's a sweet old story translated for man,

But writ in the long, long ago—

The Gospel according to Mark, Luke and John—
Of Christ and His mission below.

Men read and admire the Gospel of Christ,

With its love so unflinching and true;

But what do they say, and what do they think
Of the Gospel "according to you?"

'Tis a wonderful story, that Gospel of love,

As it shines in the Christ life Divine;

And oh that its truth might be told again

In the story of your life and mine!

Unselfishness mirrors in every scene;

Love blossoms on every sod;

And back from its vision the heart comes to tell

The wonderful goodness of God.

You are writing each day a letter to men.

Take care that the writing is true.

'Tis the only Gospel that some men will read—

That Gospel according to you.

—Evangelical Messenger.

THEN AND NOW.

L. VIOLET HODGKIN.

All through the long Summer day the little fishing village lay laughing in the sunshine.

Wonderful, almost incredible, it seemed to the strangers, that any place, however remote, could appear so wholly untouched by the great shadow brooding over the whole earth in this tragic day of 1917.

Lying out on the short hard grass on top of the steep cliff overlooking the cove, they watched the tiny village, with its low, thatched cottages and narrow paths, clustering round the sea-riem far below. More like a plaything than a real place it looked at this distance; a toy village put out by a child in a hurry; low, whitewashed walls and steep mouse-colored roofs piled up, one above the other, incoherently. Even on this hot day not one of the narrow slits of windows showed an open casement, but then, of course, in toy villages the windows never do open. Toy-like, too, were the glossy black-and-white pilchard sean boats drawn up in a friendly group on the one small patch of level green turf behind the houses. Even a few doll-like inhabitants had not been forgotten; three or four miniature figures could be seen in their best holiday suits smoking on a bench in the sun. Others, in white aprons, bustled about at the house doors or waved to yet smaller curly-headed dolls who were sporting in the sandy cove close by, their bare feet and legs glistening in the sunshine.

Only away beyond the village one thing looked strong and real, even at this distance—the massive, curved stone breakwater stretched round like an encircling arm against the waves.

The small remote fishing village, nestling under its high cliffs at this extreme western tip of England, is situated on one of the great ocean highways of the world. That peninsula of piled-up granite a mile or so to westward is the famous Land's End itself. The waters of many historic seas and channels have met and mingled in the waves that beat against this grey stone breakwater at our feet. The rainbows reflected in the iridescent sands of the broad white bay beyond come from the foaming surf of huge Atlantic breakers. Only inside the breakwater all is peace. There are no waves to be seen there; nothing but gentlest ripples afloat on still water, as the tide ebbs slowly. Rock after rock emerges, brown or green with slippery seaweed, uncovered in slow rhythmic progression within the haven, while only a few yards away, on the other side of the protecting barrier, tumultuous waves are dashing themselves in vain.

"Like souls sheltered in the peace of God,"—the thought comes in the silence up on the cliff, where even the tumult of the waves is hushed to a whisper. "The peace of God. Is there indeed such a breakwater around our troubled world to-day? However furiously the waves may beat on the one side, can there yet be always still waters on the other?"

Idly, big questions come and go; unanswered questions, for it is all too easy up here to be beguiled from a clear sequence of thought. Grey boulders of granite are heaped all round, each one illuminated, like a precious missal, with patterns and delicate scrolls of silver and golden lichen. Like the huge capital letters in those old painted manuscripts, each boulder guards and encloses its own brilliant pictures, little gay gardens set out in all the crevices of the rocks and upon the turf at their feet. Pink thrift is everywhere to be seen, in all shades from deepest rose to almost white; golden birdsfoot trefoil with crimson tips to its claws; scillas scattered like earthly constellations, in starry clusters over the grass (deep blue are the scillas when first they open, though soon bleached by the sun to a silvery grey); while in shady crevices, between the rocks, fern fronds are delicately uncurling their shy fingers, and even a few forgotten primroses linger to keep them company, and turn up pale yellow, questioning faces to the sky.

Larks rise in friendly fashion from the scented grass, while gulls and jackdaws fly to and fro on important errands, screaming vociferous messages to one another—far too full of their own concerns to notice the mere human beings that, in passing, they almost brush with their wings.

An old leather-covered volume lies among the thrift and crowfoot. The skimming shadows of the gulls' wings hover over the white page on which is written the journal of another Stranger who visited this same cove more than two hundred and fifty years ago. "A dark place," he called it, in spite of its outward sunshine. Listen to his words:

"We traveled," says George Fox in 1650, "through Somersetshire and Devonshire till we came to Plymouth, and so into Cornwall, visiting the meetings of Friends, to the Land's End. Many precious and blessed meetings we had all along as we went, wherein the convinced were established and many others were added unto them. At the Land's End an honest fisherman was convinced, who became a faithful minister of Christ. I took notice of him to Friends, telling them 'He is like Peter.'

"While I was in Cornwall there were great shipwrecks about the Land's End. I was the custom of that country at such a time, both rich and poor went out to get as much of the wreck as they could, not caring to save the people's lives, and in some parts of the country they called shipwrecks 'God's grace.' It grieved my spirit to hear of such un-Christian actions. . . . Wherefore I was moved to write a paper to reprove them for such greedy actions, and to warn and exhort them that, if they could assist to save people's lives and preserve their ships and goods, they should use their diligence therein."

Again, on another journey, four years later, in 1663, the same traveler records:

"We passed to the Land's End, to John Ellis his house, where we had a precious meeting. Here was a fisherman, Nicholas Jose, that was convinced [the same, who on a former visit had been said to be 'like Peter']. He spoke in meetings and declared the truth among the people, and the Lord's power was over all. I was glad the Lord raised up his standard in those dark parts of the nation, where since there is a fine meeting of honest-hearted Friends. Many are come to sit under Christ's teaching, and a great people the Lord will have in that country."

Boom! Boom! Two guns go off. The printed page is forgotten as a loud cry suddenly pierces the stillness. "A ship going down! A ship going down!" In a moment the cove under the cliff is transformed into a bustling hive of energy and help. Out of every house men, women and children are pouring; who could have guessed that the "toy village" had so many inhabitants? They run swiftly down the crooked paths to the water's edge, where already a goodly row of telescopes is pointing seaward. Primitive though the village may be in other respects, it is doubtful whether Mayfair itself possesses a greater number of telescopes and opera-glasses in proportion to its inhabitants. But then, to these dwellers by the ocean highways, the possession of "a good glass" ranks often, not as a luxury, but as a necessity, if life is to be saved.

Unfortunately no artificial aids to sight are necessary this Summer evening. Out at sea, among the long chain of ships that has been patrolling the coast all through the hours of the Summer's day, one vessel can now be only too plainly discerned different from the rest. A white line of surf cleaves the blue water horizontally, but the black hull that, a moment ago, rested upon it horizontally also, has already begun to show an ominous slant. Each moment that slant grows more abrupt, as the stern of the vessel gradually sinks beneath the waves and her bow as gradually rises. Only a few seconds and the slant steepens. Now the bows are out of the water altogether, the stern is entirely submerged. Next, one-half of her has disappeared; the other half sticks up vertically, like a black cone in the air. Then follows a loud explosion; a white cloud of escaping steam and a black cloud of smoke from the funnel rise, meet, and mingle for a moment in mid-air, veiling the tragedy. When they clear away, a black smudge hovers for a few seconds longer in the sky; a white scratch of foam is yet to be seen on the surface of the sea. Then those also vanish. All is calm and peaceful as before. Not a trace remains to tell that the devilry is done. In less than five minutes from the first alarm being given everything was over. One vessel less was to be seen upon the surface of the sea, one vessel more will have to be included in the list of casualties to boats "over 1,600 tons" in next week's papers.

Although our own eyes have seen it, it takes time to persuade ourselves that it is true, that we are really here, still under our granite boulder high up on the cliff. Is not this a dream, a delusion? Are we not really seated in some stuffy building watching a vivid cinematograph of the sinking of the Lusitania, that has deceived us for a moment into believing it to be real? Surely the clicking sound, the jerking of the light, will reassure us in another moment, and we shall pass on to a less terrible film? No click comes. The sun descends with majestic deliberation, almost as if reluctant to leave such utter peace. The stillness and silence and tranquil light bring conviction at last.

The village by this time is not only full of people, it is full of help. Already the doors of the one ugly uncouth building in the tiny place are standing open, and many strong pairs of arms are busy tugging at the lifeboat, drawing it out from its shelter, and then down to the beach. Men, women, little children, too; everybody lends a hand. For alas! it happens to be dead low water, and this small cove is not wealthy enough to possess a stone slip way to low water mark. Costing less than many a rich man's yacht or motor-car, it yet costs too much for the inhabitants of the cove, or, apparently, for the generosity of the British nation. Therefore, in spite of all that willing help can do, twenty-five precious minutes have elapsed before the lifeboat is actually launched. With her broad belts of glossy blue and crimson paint she looks at a little distance like a rich, ripe purple plum, and the crew, in their dark suits, like black flies crawling over her. There is something very pathetic about those best holiday suits, so different from the everyday jerseys and oilskins, that are all sacrificed without an instant's consideration, as the boat rides off upon the waters.

Apparently there is not one single thought in any heart this golden evening except helpful service, and, if need be, sacrifice to the uttermost, here in this same spot that the seventeenth century traveler found "so dark." A true prophet he, with his: "A great people the Lord will have in that country." The world may seem to learn its lessons slowly; but surely at last it does learn. And the patience of God is infinite. It is impossible to stifle an irrepresible hope that in the end the whole world may learn the lesson that this one little cove has learned in the last two hundred years. Then at last, the day will come, though none of us living may behold it, when the whole infernal mechanism of war shall be reversed, changed into love and sacrifice and service, as we have seen the "dark" village of long ago transformed before our eyes to-day.

But although thoughts like these may "dip into the future, far as human eye can see,

Find the wonder of the world and all the glory that shall be,"

the outward gaze is still riveted on the life-boat, rowing out of the harbor with a gallant swing, accompanied by steady cheering from the shore. The twelve oars, six on each side, dip unevenly at first, and then pull a clean rhythmic stroke. Outside the breakwater, a sail is raised and off she goes jauntily into the sunset.

Two steamers, meantime, are also making for the scene of the disaster. But, to the horror of the more ignorant of the spectators, no sooner do they reach it, than, instead of stopping, they head away in another direction. These steamers are followed almost with hatred as they go off at right angles and disappear, especially the larger, more important of the two, a gunboat apparently. "Is she afraid of a torpedo herself, that, instead of lingering to rescue possible survivors, she shows a clean pair of heels?" the uncomprehending strangers question. But the old salts know better, and they nod knowingly to one another. As usual, "Tout comprendre c'est tout pardonner."

"Off after the submarine, that's her job," says one.

"Quite right, too," replies the other. "Yon's not decent fighting. It's cruel just murder." And his eyes turn again to follow the lifeboat, a mere dancing black speck by this time upon the golden water.

The sun has set some time ago. The fading light draws an impenetrable curtain hiding the fact that the misjudged gunboat, before turning to chase the submarine, had launched a boat, invisible even to the best glass on shore in the growing darkness, which has succeeded in picking up almost a score of survivors from the destroyed vessel. Only the men in the engine-room—brave souls!—had perished in the explosion, and had all gone down with their doomed ship.

Of this, however, the dwellers in the cove were ignorant all through the long hours of that long night. To them, the only hope of rescue lay in their own lifeboat. And therefore the village kept its vigil, the old salts waiting up for tidings; the women watching, as wives and mothers have watched for ages, to welcome their own men home. The lifeboat returns at length in the early dawn. The men are dog tired, physically, and spiritually out of heart. They fear that they have toiled in vain, little dreaming of the joyful news that will be flashed from the big town farther down the coast when the rescued men are landed there a few hours later.

On that night, it was, in the darkness, late, after all other light had faded, that from an open window high up on the cliff, there was discerned for a few moments a strange, burning glow far off over the sea. Ruddy it shone, then golden, then dazzling white. A living light, that trembled and pierced, that vanished and returned, that shone inexorably over the water just where the murdered vessel had gone down. Explain it if you will, as the returning gunboat signalling to the coast-guard station on the cliff. There may have been yet simpler explanations. But one watcher saw in it also, and will ever see, a hint, a remembrance, of that other unsleeping, burning, piercing light—the memory of God.—From Workers at Home and Abroad.

A LETTER OF CHEER.

[Since the Fourth Month 25th number went to press the following letter has been received, written specially for THE FRIEND. The translation contained in that issue makes every detail of this letter doubly interesting.—Eds.]

Care The Friends' Emergency Committee,

27 CHANCERY LANE,

London, E. C. 2.

Nowadays, when letters are but too often the bearers of bad news, it is a rare and refreshing experience to receive one which adds to our hopefulness instead of depleting it. Such a letter is one recently received by the Friends' Emergency Committee from Dr. Elizabeth Rotten, the superintendent of the Bureau for the assistance of Germans abroad and foreigners in Germany. This latter society, in Berlin (like the Friends' Emergency Committee of London) was started quite in the early days of the war, and has ever since, under Dr. Rotten's able management, carried forward a courageous and humanitarian work for all aliens in Germany whether British, American, Russian, French, Italian or Serb.

The cheer of the letter referred to consists in its account of the efforts made last Christmas by the Berlin bureau to brighten by some plain token of human love and good-will those who, through no fault of their own, found themselves prisoners in a foreign land. And although, on previous Christmases the Bureau had done what it could to hearten the prisoners by means of friendly messages and presents of food and clothing, this time the members had it specially at heart to think of those who had little or nothing to expect from other quarters. This being so, they were enabled, through the special efforts of the Swiss Red Cross to forward parcels to six camps, to needy Frenchmen, whose addresses were furnished by the Prisoners' Aid Committee, with the remark that, during the period of a long imprisonment, they had never yet received a single parcel.

What this can mean to men far from home, and cut off from the outside world, only those who have themselves experienced the horror of "barbed wire" can fully understand. The same kind thought prompted a similar action towards the Serbians in the camp at Königbruck. Furthermore an order was despatched to Copenhagen for bags with little comforts for a large number of Italians recently made prisoners.

At Ruhleben, there was a general visiting day for the prisoners whose families are still in Germany, and a Christian festivity was arranged in the camp itself. This idea had also been conceived independently by the authorities themselves, and they readily granted permission for its carrying out with the proviso that it must apply only to those whose wives and children resided in Berlin and its neighborhood. And now comes what one cannot help but consider as the cream of the letter, rich with soul-satisfying, if not body-building, fat!

"As a slight compensation to those children of interned men whose homes are outside Berlin and who were not able to take part in the Christmas celebrations in the camp, in the middle of December, a circular letter was sent to their mothers through the whole of Germany, and asked them to inform us of each child's special wish, and we were thus able to fulfill them to the satisfaction, as it seems, of both the little ones and their mothers."

To think of it! All those little souls, cut off from their daddies, who did not "make the war," cut off also by the inexorable hands of Fate, from the blessed offices of Santa Claus! And perhaps not one of those children but had some longing for a special book or toy, a longing often cherished secretly because it realized with an experience purchased all too early by misfortune, that a harassed mother was powerless to supply the want, and that, moreover, Santa Claus might overlook you if you were desperately poor! And surely those who are mothers will realize what those "alien" mothers must have felt when, over and over again, they were obliged to deny the children's petitions and tried to pacify them with vague promises of gratification "when the war is over." And it is not to be wondered at, if, as the weeks passed into months, and the months slid into years, the children turned into little sceptics with regard to its duration. And then, one morning, the mother receives a letter from Berlin inviting her to state what is the special thing each child is wanting. And if she is wise, she does not tell the children, for fear something may happen at the last moment to get in Santa Claus's way. But when the old questions are asked and she sees the wistful look of hope deferred in the little faces, there is an unusual tone in her voice, as she says, "We must wait and see."

Can you, who have always been able to provide toys for your little ones, imagine what that mother felt when, at Christmas time, the parcel arrived from Berlin, and the presents were actually in the children's hands? And for the interned fathers also, it must surely have robbed the sense of separation not a little of its sting to know that those they loved were not being left to fight the unequal battle of life entirely alone, and that, although they themselves might not personate Santa Claus for their children, kind hearts of those who were total strangers to them put themselves back into the days of their own childhood and had taken the responsibility upon themselves.

As for the children, who shall describe that rapturous joy of theirs in possessing at last the very thing for which they have craved so long?

I envy that member of Dr. Rotten's committee (if it was not Dr. Rotten herself) who first conceived such an idea. That person, whoever it was, ought to be presented with the order of Santa Claus. That such a thing should be not only conceived but carried out, in a land which many are accustomed to regard as the storm-centre of hate, should surely convince us, if conviction were needed, that, when evil is at its height, and brute force triumphant, Love holds fast in the delicate fibres that thrill at the heart of the world?

OLAF BAKER.

A HOME LETTER FROM THE ITALIAN FRONT.

[This letter is from Edward Porter, a Haverford boy, serving in the British Ambulance Unit in Italy. It is dated Second Month 11, 1918, and has been handed to us for publication by D. D. Test.—Eds.]

VILLA TRIESTE, Second Month 11, 1918.

DEAR FATHER AND MOTHER:—

My letter of a few days ago included five photos of a personal nature, with explanations attached, which you may or may not receive, according to whether the censor is indulgent or not. Certainly they are of no military value, being taken for the most part at least four miles behind the line. However, no doubt they will be of considerable interest to you.

Last week we had a day off, preparatory to going to the front, and I took an all-day walk among the Euganean Hills, which I will describe later in my letter.

I will leave day after to-morrow for the Piave line, as my present car is not a mountaineer by any means, and I shall be extremely glad to get back to work. I think that the fortunate stroke of ours in regaining our old prestige, and being placed at these two important points will do much to persuade me to remain at my present work.

We left at 9.45 A. M., with a lunch in our kit bags and a thermos flask full of hot coffee. The day was somewhat misty, although the sun was shining. We climbed two small hills, about 700 feet, just back of our villa quarters and then passed along the ridges commanding a view of _____, and of course in the distance the _____ which I speak of earlier in my letter. Snow-capped and far away to the East we could see the hills of _____, which you will be able to see on the map. To the South, we could see over the plains towards _____, and behind us the spires of _____. We struggled over the ridges, getting hotter and hotter (remember this is still Winter), 'till we looked down into the valleys between us and _____. We then passed down to the road and cut up to the North, towards four poplars standing on a small hill, and remarking to my companion (an old hand) a Catholic shrine. We passed on to it, and came to a small door of a building at the base of the poplars. Inside (it might be reverential to a Catholic, but was ghastly to us) there stood the hideous wooden effigy of a monk, hands outstretched, grinning, with clothes hung on him like a scarecrow. It turned out that he had been a good old fellow, who was fairly worshipped for his godliness, and so the poor inhabitants had built this wooden shrine to him, and one then felt reverent towards him, and towards the people who had given their pence, to retain a monument of one who had the spirit of Jesus in him; be it Catholic, or Protestant, Jew or Mohammedan. The crudeness of something approaching idolatry gave way before the image of a man, who had worked for others with the spirit of humility, and under the guidance of what he at least judged to be right. So on we went, now feeling cooler as we came above the mist and climbed the last hill between us and Monte Venda. From this we could see the deep valley between us and Venda, on which was a wireless station and the remains of a ruined monastery. To the left, joined by a neck from Venda was Monta Rosa, on which stood glistening in the sun a large monastery, surrounded by a white wall and approached by a winding mountain path. We descended to the valley between and started to climb to the monastery on Rosa, a height of some 1500 feet. Not very high to be true, but this was our fifth hill and it still was not noon. We followed the winding path and finally reached the walls; walked around to the gate and decided to lunch before entering. Coffee (hot—thanks to my thermos), sardines, ham, bread, oranges and figs, made up our "simple fare" on our pilgrimage to the famous Monta Rosa. However, we thought possibly they will give us a few days off in Purgatory for this pilgrimage and wondering whether we should cover our khaki with sackcloth and ashes, we entered a long path, quite steep with sharp corners, and fifteen feet stone walls on each side (how did they get all this stone up here?) brought us finally to a beautiful gate, with a rope bell, which we rang and awaited the monk's pleasure. All was complete, as one saw it in books like "Ivanhoe," even to the small peep-hole in the door through which the monks might study the stranger and judge if he was a black knight or a bearer of the white armor of righteousness. However, that's just what I thought, and of course not what happened. In a few minutes a little old porter, not five feet high, with a two-foot beard and an itching palm, opened the door and welcomed the "Englishe," informing us that the Fratuli were at worship, but inviting us to walk around. Inside was a chapel in the centre, small houses to the right, two or three old wells of nearly biblical type, and twenty or thirty little separate cottages which turned out to be the rooms in which each monk lived alone.

We passed a window and saw the monks at service. It was now 12.45. We waited and in a few minutes they came out, and the old Father Superior in the white garb of the Carmelite monks approached us, and, thanks to the Italian of my companion, we held his companionship for an hour-and-a-quarter. He showed us the beautiful chapel with the adjoining chaplets, took us behind the altar, showed us his own little house (two-roomed), whitewashed inside and out, plain but comfortable, with a little stove in his bed-room, his personal library, his own little altar, off the main room. (Each monk lived in this manner.) He told us the history of the order, that this monastery had thirty-one monks before the war, that many were Padres in the army, leaving only six monks on Monta Rosa; that they could only talk to each other twice a week for a few minutes; that they ate together only three times a year, and then could not talk to one another; that each had a garden and raised his own vegetables, did his own black-smithing, carpentry, etc. In short, they were close to self-supporting and so on; he spoke in clear Italian that even I could understand nearly all of what he said. He showed us the library and an endless number of interesting things, even was broad-minded enough to argue sensibly against Protestantism, and offered us the best wine in his cellars. Indeed, for a few hours we lived among the Crusaders and saw the early church, which is Christian after all, true to its ideals, living in the spirit of the early ages; hopelessly lost, to be true, because it could not advance; because its life was apart from the world, because it refused to admit that this world was other than a phenomena, because it refused to work not only on the spirit of the people, but also on its mind, and if our church, the Protestant one, will forever try to live "in the world, but not of the world," they will join the Catholic in its lack of worldliness. Yes! we must live of the world, not to follow it, but to lead it, that all may live finally of the spirit. The earth is not worthless, it is a magnificent heritage of God, and if we throw it aside, that we may get nearer Him in spirit, we (to my judgment) are committing a fatal error. We have minds and judgment, given by God to us and if a religion says us not that mind but live of the spirit alone, we are throwing aside a gift of God. Judgment and mental conception should not break down our judgment of the spirit. They should support our spiritual judgment. The two are not antagonistic (as so many Protestants and all Catholics say). They are co-operative and together form a unity of judgment that will decide our path in this world (not of sorrows); I say that from the battlefield. No, this world of joyous sacrifice for an ideal, in which we must live, is not only a prelude to a better world, but is a gift of God in itself.

Well, 3.15 and we left Monta Rosa, and after an hour of walking through the valleys, homeward, we came to a little cottage, all alone, cuddled on the side of a hill, and there met a little lad to whom we had given some chocolate a few hundred yards back. We said "good evening" to his mother, who was on the steps, an old and broken woman, with the face of a man; and then without even a word of introduction, she broke down and in nearly unspokeable Italian shrieked out, yes, shrieked out, "O! my sons, my two poor sons are dead," and in the next breath begged us to enter and have some "Vin Blanc" or local white wine. We came in, a little cottage, clean with copper pots around, and a dozen (nearly fifty, I believe) postcards on the wall. The old man gave us of his wine, and produced apples. The mother, with a grown-up daughter and three kiddies, wailed out their story. One son died in Gorizia, our old out-station before the retreat; another killed on Monta Tomba five days ago, a third with the Italians in France. We comforted her, and then got a dose of that "insidious Boche Propaganda" that broke the Italian army, and nearly brought disaster to the Allies. "The English have come to conquer the country! They will rule us all," she said, standing up before us and trembling with anger and fear. "They will never have Italy. They do not fight themselves—they have lost nothing in the war!" It was a wonderful opportunity, we cited English losses, and she believed us, we said we had been here since 1915, had carried 150,000 Italian wounded alone; that in two days we would go to the line of that fearsome Monta Tomba, that had robbed her of her son, and then she broke down, showered us with wine which we could not drink, apples which would have given us "Tummy ache," and so on. We talked for an hour, and then giving pennies to the little kiddies (for they themselves would take no money), we saluted and left the house, she put her hands on my shoulder and said in horrible dialect, "You understand, Signor, me but little, and I know no English, but you carry our wounded and you go at front to-morrow, 'Good Fortune' and may the Madonna be with you." "Yes! and may the Madonna be with me, and remember, mother, yes, although you be Protestant, that blessing of a poor broken Catholic mother." And with that I will say "Good-night" and have not fear for the terror that walketh in darkness, nor for the arrow that flieth by day. Yes, the blessings of a mother, whether she be Catholic or Jew, mount to the throne of God, if asked with the spirit of Jesus in her heart, though she may think the Madonna is her medium to God.

Your son,

EDWARD.

"A little while, to wear the weeds of sadness,
To pace with weary step through miry ways;
Then to pour forth the fragrant oil of gladness,
And clasp the girdle round the robe of praise.

"And He who is Himself the Gift and Giver—
The future glory and the present smile,
With the bright promise of the glad for ever,
Will light the shadows of the little while."

[WHILE we fervently trust that conditions with us may never reach the acute stage that they reached with Friends in England, there is much in the following, taken from a recent issue of The Friend (London), to claim serious reflection on the part of all of us.—Eds.]

OVERSEERS AND ELDERS.

There are several reasons why the present time is one when much depends on the conscientious, alert, and loving work of Overseers and Elders in our Society. Quiet, unobtrusive work it is, no doubt, but if satisfactorily performed, all-permeating in its effects in our congregations.

War conditions have affected us all. Many Friends are facing serious financial difficulties; young mothers are left alone to face all home cares, and the training and education of the children, while their hearts are heavy with anxiety. Many, too, are the vacant places which will never be filled again. Nor is it only those facing economic difficulty, loneliness, and sorrow who are suffering from war conditions. The shortage of labor and transit facilities in all directions is causing overwork and exhaustion to many elderly Friends, in their efforts to continue their usual social service activities, or to fill gaps in industrial life. Anxiety and overwork during long periods have an increasingly depressing effect, particularly on the young and those past middle life. Probably all our meetings, even the smallest, are faced with these difficulties, or some of them.

In other churches the minister is the appointed messenger of comfort and help. He is expected to be alert and watchful, ready to succour and comfort and sympathize with all his congregation, and to know all their individual needs. Among Friends this pastoral care is deputed to the Overseers. There is no other body authorized by the Society to carry out these most important services. Are Overseers in all our meetings fully alive to their increased responsibilities? Do they in their several meetings regularly meet together and earnestly endeavor to find opportunities for helpfulness both to individuals and to their meetings? Something more is needed than a negative waiting for possible calls on their services.

The ideal body of Overseers is awake and alert, fully conscious that theirs is no negative position, but one where initiative may play a helpful part in the background of their meeting's life. For instance, in one country meeting Overseers found a useful method of helping the sense of brotherhood by inviting individual Friends to give simple accounts of their local social services (cottage building, County Council work, etc.). By this means all the members were helped to sympathize with and share the interests of those engaged in local usefulness. During the depression of war time a simple Christmas party for the young children of the meeting was felt to be a valuable function by a body of Overseers. Where Overseers are broad-mindedly awake to their pastoral responsibilities, opportunities will certainly occur for their usefulness to the congregation, in many varying ways, beside the more obvious routine duties of visiting the sick and afflicted.

Considering the important functions of Overseers in our community, is enough care always taken in their selection at the time of the triennial appointment? It seems hardly credible that Friends should have been selected in the train on the way to the Monthly Meeting where the appointment was to be made! It is a great gain to have the appointment limited to three years, but sometimes there has not been sufficient care to secure younger Friends' services.

War conditions are also making unusual claims on the services of Elders. In most meetings there are diversities of opinion about war, and though we have all learned useful lessons of forbearance and charity of judgment, there are many opportunities for kindly help from Elders. Many meetings have the privilege of the attendance of non-Friends, who have been drawn to us by their pacifist views since the war; some of these give vocal service in our meetings and must often be thankful, in their new environment, for the wise help of Elders. But it is not only these strangers whom the war has greatly moved. Many of our members are deeply stirred and changed in their spiritual outlook by the war, and a far-sighted, vigilant eldership, alert for opportunities of helpfulness, may lead these Friends to find their way to vocal service in our meetings for worship. Are Elders always alive to their responsibility for helpful suggestion and encouragement, or are they sometimes content to leave things alone, so long as they see no reason to find fault? Do Elders meet regularly and earnestly seek for opportunities for helpfulness? The position of a sensitive Friend who speaks occasionally under a deep concern, but who fails to realize whether his message, his voice, or his manner has been acceptable, and who gets no help from the Elders may be most discouraging.

When at last peace comes, may we not hope that many will turn to us, profoundly unable to harmonize war and Christ's gospel of love? If so, it is time to prepare for them now. One of the ways of putting our house in order, is to see to it that we have a truly spiritual, alert, and sympathetic Overseership and Eldership.

M. G.

WESLEY'S LEARNING.

Writing of John Wesley some one in The Outlook says:

The explanation of his extraordinary physical endurance is the power that the spirit has over the body. He was a little man, "barely five feet six inches in height," and spare as well as short. He was anything but an athlete, and his early life certainly did nothing to develop in him remarkable physical powers. He died in the eighty-eighth year of his age, and on his last birthday he wrote in his diary: "For above eighty-six years I found none of the infirmities of age; my eyes did not wax dim, neither was my natural strength abated." Yet he had used his body to a degree rare in human history. "In the fifty years of his itinerant life he preached over fifty thousand times—an average of some fifteen sermons a week." "The distance he had to travel made him a hard rider;" yet "his saddle was his study; most of his miscellaneous reading was done on horseback." And it was very miscellaneous. Nothing in literature that was of any value came amiss to him. "He was familiar not only with the great works of his own literature, but with those of the Greek, Latin, Italian, French, German, and he had a good reading knowledge of Spanish."

RELIEF WORK AT BAR-LE-DUC.

FROM LETTERS OF MARGERY SCATTERGOOD.

An interesting war zone performance is walking from the Boulevard de la Rochelle to the High town at night when you have forgotten your flashlight. You close the door of 99 behind you with a bang, and for a moment stand bewildered in the pitch blackness. You see not one single thing—everything is a black blank. But—you hear voices and the scuffle of many feet, which warns you that if you venture two steps from the door, you will immediately be knocked down by the passers by. Stealthily you grope your way along the walls of the houses, clinging to the shutters and door posts to be sure you're keeping close. Finally you venture out into the crowd. A row of burning cigarette stumps passes, followed by voices. Bang! You have run into a little boy and nearly knocked him down. How did you know it was a little boy? Because you could faintly distinguish a white collar which came about to your waist. Look out! That must be the curbstone, for the two poilus ahead have just fallen down it, amid a flow of strong language. Flash! Someone has turned the electric light right in your face and you hesitate, absolutely dazzled and bewildered. He passes on and you follow a row of poilus up a side street. . . . "Parbleu! Quoi diable—oh! pardon, Mademoiselle!" One of the poilus ahead suddenly stops without the slightest notice, and you, not seeing him at all walk right into him. And so it goes till you finally tumble the key-hole of the Maison Beeslot and swing open the heavy door with a sigh of relief. The above description is not one bit exaggerated. All the incidents did not happen on the same evening, but they all happened! I will say this for the French, though, that they are usually much too polite to turn their flashlights into your face, and that rarely happens.

To-day I went to Longueville again to visit some of the refugees from the Verdun district. They were very badly off for furniture and housekeeping necessities. The first family I visited had not been able to save anything from their home, and in the three years they have been here, they have bought almost nothing because they were always afraid that they would have to flee again. Then, too, their income was very uncertain and food so high that they lived from hand to mouth and saved nothing for furniture. They had borrowed a bedstead for M. and Mme., but the daughter was sleeping on a sort of table with a straw mattress on it, and on top of that two sacks of leaves and a few dirty blankets. They had only three chairs, and the one they offered me nearly fell to pieces when I sat on it.

CHARMONT.

FRANCES FERRIS.

FOURTH MONTH —, 1918.

Charmont does not belie its name. It is a picturesque village crowning the hills that border the Marne valley, about ten kilometres north of Sermaize. Some twenty years ago this was one of the richest vineyards of Champagne, and the comfortable farm houses still betoken the prosperity of the village. But a blight struck the vines and the fields were turned to farms, and the farming is now carried on on a small scale, merely for the individual family maintenance rather than for profit. The surrounding forest lands offer the largest industry of the district at present, and daily, processions of ancient dames pass the door, bearing enormous burdens of fagots on their backs in cornucopia baskets. The slopes are covered with orchards that next month must clothe the landscape with a drift of bloom.

The little équipe here, consisting at this moment of one American and ten old women refugees, had its genesis after the Fall bombardments at Bar. It seemed necessary to find some place near enough to Bar, to which these infirm old people, not ill, but not able to sleep in the caves, could be brought by automobile. Charmont, not being on any railroad, is totally unimportant from a military point of view, and so is fairly safe. Six weeks of rain, rats and wretchedness were spent in an abandoned old chateau nearby, before the present cosy farm-house was secured and the menage moved in. The location is on the edge of the village, overlooking a wide expanse of country to the west. It is the site of an ancient chateau of Renaumont, twice destroyed, once by a thunderball, the second time in the Revolution by a mob who came, so the story goes, to murder two priests as they were holding midnight services in the chapel. A moat still surrounds the place, where ducks paddle peacefully and groups of garrulous women bat and rinse their blanchissage. The present buildings were the farm and out-houses of the old chateau. The great greniers and shees stand empty and swept, ready to receive a possible influx of refugees, if the Spring brings a new bombardment at Bar. At present, the distant booming of the cannon in the Argonne, or an occasional high-flying Boche plane are the only disturbers of the peace.

But Charmont's raison d'être is not merely to furnish a shelter for a handful of stranded old refugee women. The doctor holds a weekly clinic here and considerable amateur medical work is done in the village. A shop has been opened where stuffs, bedding and furniture are sold at reduced prices to refugees. Recently an ouvroir has been opened at Nettancourt, nearby, where cut-out clothing is distributed for sewing, the same to be sold afterward in the shop; later in the Spring, when the roads get more passable—or navigable rather—the Verdun visiting will be done by bicycle in the district to the north. As the work in the "New Meuse" develops, Charmont may even become a piéd-à-terre (relief centre) of some importance for that region. Thus Charmont makes no large pretensions, but tries to fill a modest place of real service in the work of the Mission.

THE OREGON TRAIL.

(Continued from page 603.)

The mission that called us to the West centred for several days at Portland. The U. S. Board of Indian Commissioners had been called to meet there. George Vaux, Jr., of Philadelphia, is Chairman of the Board, and Daniel Smiley of Mohonk, the other representative from the Society of Friends. There are ten members of the Board and religiously they represent such a range as to secure freedom from denominational influence. Although the functions of this Board are advisory and not administrative, it is actually a most important wheel in the government guardianship of the Indians. This was disclosed to the writer through the unexpected courtesy of an invitation to attend the Board Meetings. The genial Secretary facetiously announced that all Federal bodies had authority to appoint chaplains and that they would make me chaplain pro tem! It was well understood that the proceedings of the meeting should not be disclosed, but two observations will not be out of order. The first is in regard to the extent and consequent complexity of the Indian problem. There are more than one hundred and thirty Indian reservations, so that it is not an exaggeration to say that the questions involved are at least of one hundred and thirty varieties! In this view the rather ponderous title of the reports to our Yearly Meeting "on the civilization and improvement of the Indians" seems quite in the domain of the pretentious!

The second consideration involves the fundamentals of a trusteeship. The government for fifty years has acted as self-appointed trustee of the Indians. Treaties have recognized the obligations involved, but in the main the beneficiaries have had to accept the quality of service rendered. Under such circumstances nothing could be more important than an absolute divorce of the trusteeship from politics. The civil service has been applied to the Indian Bureau of the government, but the quality of stability and of efficiency assumed in trusteeship is still largely an attainment of the future for these wards of the nation. The Board of Indian Commissioners represents the government recognition that this attainment is desirable. Had they no other assigned function their service, and the expense of their service, would be justified.

In addition to the business of the meetings, members of the Board spend much time during the year in visiting schools and reservations. The Oregon and Washington district make a favorable field for this. An ordinary government map will show more than a dozen Reservations in these two States.

The Chemawa School was the scene of our first visit. It is about two hours south of Portland, in the Salem neighborhood, and is reached easily by steam or electric train. As we left the train we were saluted by the music of a band. We found everything about the School of six hundred pupils "on inspection." Doors everywhere were open and the resources and methods of the School were most freely on view. Federal law makes the Commissioners official inspectors. Superintendent Hall was once a member of the Friendly circle at Salem, N. J. He has the right feeling for his work, is clean cut and determined in administration and we felt that he had a good school. Our lunch was prepared and served by the Domestic Science Department. For quality and finish and attractiveness of service it would have done credit to the best standard of Simon's College. We were waited on by an Alaskan, whose evident pleasure in her responsibility added greatly to a natural charm of appearance and movement. An Assembly after lunch gave the visitors an opportunity for speech making. The agricultural side of the School was then inspected. The emphasis of effort is in this direction and good results were in evidence. The surrounding land, likely boundless areas of Oregon and Washington, is thickly studded with great tree stumps. A small tract had just been cleared at a cost per acre in excess of $200. As we traveled in various directions we learned that the initial cost of land was thus from two to four hundred dollars.

Superintendent Hall is an opponent of co-education in Indian schools. His numbers are about evenly divided. In interviewing two other prominent superintendents we found this opposition was not seconded. Undoubtedly the subject presents more than ordinary difficulties with Indian children, but these may indicate that it is extraordinarily important that the problems involved should be faced and solved in the schools.

Before going north from Portland, a day was devoted to the interests of local Friends. We called it our "Friends' day." Pacific College, at Newburg, is something more than an hour south of Portland by the Inter-urban. The railway line winds amongst the hills that rise from the valley of the Willamette and discloses fine views of distant woodland and blooming prune orchards. Newburg is said to have one of the largest prune orchards in Oregon. An inquiry of the conductor as to whether there was a railroad station at the College arrested the attention of a benignant gentleman who presented himself to us. He proved to be Ezra Woodward, President of the College Board, and father of the editor of the American Friend. Under his willing leadership we got down from the train at the College and were taken to the office of President Levi Pennington. One end of the office was decorated with an illustration of Penn's Treaty, woven in linen by the Richardson's in Bessbrook, Ireland. It bore the well-known inscription, "The only treaty with the Indians not confirmed with an oath and never broken."

The President of the College was a close second to the President of the Board in welcoming us to Newburg. It was promptly arranged that we should dine together at the hotel and meet Jesse Edwards there, too. President Pennington made the rounds of the College with us. There are about one hundred students and an adequate staff. The buildings and equipment are meagre, a determination to increase these and so to meet prescribed collegiate conditions having been arrested by the war. The plans for development have been put on paper. They are modest, but substantial and promising. The spirit of the place, if we detected it correctly, is such as to insure the realization of these plans when conditions are once more normal. In commenting on present financial difficulties, it was observed that even Westtown School was now facing a deficit of $10,000 a year. "That," responded the president, "would run Pacific College a year!" At dinner, in addition to those above mentioned, we met the pastor of the Newburg "Friends' Church." We were told he is especially welcome in his place because of his "friendliness." Newburg is accessible to streams of water in which there is "big" fishing. We were entertained with fishing stories quite acceptable to admirers of a certain famous Isaac!

When dinner was over, we had the pleasure of meeting the staff and student body of the College. The chief resource of the College is undoubtedly its earnest following of young men and women! With a great country of almost unlimited resources as yet very little developed, what may they not be expected to make of themselves and of their college!

(To be continued.)

A RESOLVE.

I'm going to make To-day so fair
That when it's gone the usual way
On some To-morrow full of care
Twill make a pleasant Yesterday.

And when the Future doth appear
A dreary prospect, bleak and black,
I'll ease a very present fear
By looking back!

—J. K. BANGS.

CHILDREN'S CORNER.

QUAKER FLOWERS.

Brown-eyed Ruth, the Quaker daughter,
In her dress of simple gray,
Walked beside her quiet grandpa
Mid the garden flowers of May.

Beds of tulips, bright and golden,
Hyacinths of every shade,
Pansies like sweet childish faces,
Looking up, to greet the maid.

How they reveled in the sunshine
White mid clumps of violet blue,
Filling all the air with fragrance,
Glistening still with morning dew.

Then out spoke the little maiden
Looking at her dress of gray
"Grandpa, can thee tell the reason Why God made the flowers so gay?"

"While we wear the quiet colors
That thee knows we never meet,
E'en in clover or in daisies,
That we trample under feet.

"Seems to me a Quaker garden
Should not grow such colors bright,"
Roughly the brown eyes twinkled
While the grandpa laughed outright.

"True it is, my little daughter,
Flowers were not the Quaker gray,
Yet they neither toil, nor labor
For their beautiful array.

"Keeping still the sweet old colors
As their grandmother of yore
Else how should we know the flowers
If each year new tints they bore?"

Once again the brown eyes twinkled,
"Grandpa, thee is always right,
Yet thee shows by thine own teaching
Some may dress in colors bright."

"Those whom thee calls worldly people,
In their purple, and their gold,
Are no gayer than those pansies,
Or their grandmothers of old.

"Yet thee knows I am contented
With this quiet life of ours,
Yet for all I'm glad, dear grandpa—
That there are no Quaker flowers."

BEULAH.—Up in the hill country of Pennsylvania you may still see little girls who dress and live much as your grandmothers did in the days you love to hear them tell about. "When I was a little girl!"

You may see them helping their fathers and big brothers in the fields, or walking to school, carrying lunch in a tin pail, and a bunch of flowers "for teacher." They wear stout dresses and gingham aprons and "Shaker" bonnets, or knitted hoods, and at home they have their share in all the work and do it well.

One of them, that I know best, is Beulah, and I wish I could paint her picture for you. Blue-eyed, fair-haired, with cheeks as pink as the arbutus, which hides beneath its leaves along the wood-roads near her home in the Spring, and which she calls "Beauties." She smiles cheerily when you meet her, but her words are few. Ask her if the girl who is with her is her cousin, and she will answer, "No," but will not go on to tell you who she is.

Every morning near eight o'clock, Beulah comes "up the mountain" and knocks at our kitchen door. In her chip basket, beside our daily supply of milk and cream, butter or eggs, and fresh vegetables in the season, there is apt to be a bunch of old-fashioned flowers, ranging from a small and very fragrant blue hyacinth or a bunch of "daffies" in the Spring all the way to gorgeous dahlias and rusty-red chrysanthemums in the Fall. These she hands out with a smile, and a brief "for you!"

True to her German ancestry, Beulah loves her flowers, and she searches industriously among our old tin cans for any that will hold a slip of geranium. When autumn comes, she can point proudly to a long row of them, ranged on the window sill. "They will bloom for me," she says. And they always do. Bulbs or seeds as a gift, bring the smiles to her face more quickly than anything else.

A busy worker is Beulah, indoors and out. Two younger sisters and a baby brother need much care. Of what we call pleasures, she has few.

One bright autumn day, when all the country-side was flocking to the great Fair, she came into the kitchen with our supply of fresh eggs, just as all hands were busy putting up lunch, and being told that we, too, were bound for the Fair, some one asked if she was going. "No," she said, a bit wistfully. Then the master of the house had a happy thought. "Come go with us!" he cried. "Be ready at eleven!" Such a sweet and neat and happy Beulah as climbed into the automobile at the appointed time, ready for the trip, and such a happy day as she had!

Yet how sensible she took its joys, not rushing from one to another, but giving time and thought to each. The exhibit of chickens she greatly enjoyed. So many kinds! The cows she greeted like old friends. Having our tin-types taken in a group was very interesting. But the crowning joy was the monkey! Beulah had never seen one before. We thought she might be afraid of him. But no! Given a penny, she marched gravely up and put it into his cold, brown paw, and he took it just as gravely and bowed his thanks. Then Beulah laughed merrily. "He is funny!" she said. To watch him pick up the paper plates, which had held ice cream and clean them off so cleverly with his wee pink tongue, made her laugh again. It was hard to leave him and go on even to other strange sights.

And at evening when we reached her own door, and she climbed carefully down with her armful of "samples" she did not forget to say, "Thank you for taking me to the Fair," or to smile again at the remembrance of the monkey.

It is good for us to remember now-a-days, that the love of garden and farm, the thrifty habits, the honest and careful attention to duty, which we love in our little Beulah, were all inherited from her German forefathers, who did so much to make our great State of Pennsylvania. F. T. R.

NEWS ITEMS.

PHILADELPHIA QUARTERLY MEETING.—Testimony was borne to the life and labors of C. Virginia Sellow, word of whose death had just reached the meeting when Philadelphia Quarterly Meeting opened at Fourth and Arch Streets. Mary Nicholson, Catharine Jacob and George S. Warner paid tribute to this minister.

MAX I. REICH spoke regarding the value to God of human lives and works. Elinu Grant, of Haverford College, urged that more voices be raised in thanksgiving and praise. "Testimony," he said, "helps the one who testifies, giving him strength for more service." Joseph Elkinton and Margaret Absp spoke briefly.

The business session, usually held separately, was conducted concisely.

The first business, after reading extracts from the Minutes of the recent Yearly Meeting, was a communication from the Western District Monthly Meeting, held at Twelfth Street, asking permission to continue permanently joint sessions. This was granted.

A report of the work of Arch Street Centre, at Third and Arch Streets, was given. It showed a good patronage for its second year; 629 guests had been entertained, some only for a few nights, others for many weeks.

Among these had been groups of young men en route for France to join the Friends' Reconstruction Unit. The dining-room had good patronage, and 196 committees had held meetings here. The dining-room had yielded $11,000 and lodging $2000. The total disbursements amounted to $15,656.84, yet a cash balance remained.

Franklin Blair, of North Carolina, was gratified at the joint business session, and urged closer unity of men's and women's meetings and co-operation among Friends everywhere. Michael de Sherbinn, a former teacher among the Doukloobors, gave brief tribute to the Society of Friends.

SECRETARY'S OFFICE, 304 ARCH STREET.—An increasing number of Friends (mostly parents) have consulted this office recently, one class having a desire to secure positions in some agricultural operation for their sons of fifteen years and over; others are wanting boys to work on their farms.

We are aware of the growing and very commendable spirit among our boys, which is shown in a desire to be of real service in these times of stress. These boys, rather young to engage in reconstruction work abroad, or who for other good reasons do not apply for service under the Friends' Unit, are likely to find that, in the event of a prolongation of the war, a well-established position in agriculture, is, so far as we can now judge, likely to have an important bearing on Draft Boards in securing deferred classification under the Selective Service rules.

We do not wish in any way to interfere with any organized effort already established, aiming in some degree to solve the labor problems, but shall be glad to serve as a bureau through which our members can make known their requests for assistance.

Many sturdy lads will in a few weeks finish their year's work in school, and we venture to express the opinion that most of our healthy boys will want to spend the approaching Summer in some kind of real helpful work—and we are particularly interested that agriculture may claim a goodly number.

WM. B. HARVEY.

IN THE FRIEND OF Fourth Month 11th we outlined the work that has been carried on by J. Henry Scattergood since soon after his return from France last Autumn.

Since that report was made he has visited various centres in the interest of Friends' Reconstruction work and without exception has met with sympathetic audiences.

In our last statement we reported that the total number who had attended his meetings was about 30,000. His recent visits have been chiefly in North Carolina, with a meeting at Richmond, Va., three in New York State, and a few in towns near Philadelphia, in all fifteen or sixteen audiences, the total attendance being about 5000.

The places in North Carolina visited in this circuit were High Point, Marlborough (an isolated country meeting, to reach which he had to travel through mud huls-deep), Greensboro (the meeting was held in a theatre, under the auspices of Friends and the Red Cross, and 750 attended), Guilford College, Rich Square and Woodland. At the last named the meeting was held in the High School, and was attended by 450.

A Friend of Woodland writes: "I am just as pleased as I can be with the whole thing (referring to the visit of J. H. S. and the meeting). I was glad to hear thee was coming, desired that we would have a good night, hoped that the house would be full of interested listeners and that thee would have a story to tell that everybody would be thoroughly interested in and that everybody would enjoy every word of it. Everything came as I wished it. . . . I have a schedule mapped out for thee when thee comes this way again."

Probably the meeting at Richmond, Va., was the most remarkable of all those held in the South. The High School Auditorium was granted for the purpose, and 350 people attended. There are only about a dozen Friends in Richmond, and J. H. S. remarked that "they were pretty brave, as the town is, of course, full of the military spirit." As we said a month ago, so we wish to repeat it again, that these meetings, held by J. H. S. in widely scattered sections of our country, are of untold service to the cause which he and all Friends desire to promote. As quoted by a reporter of a southern paper: "We don't want shakers any more than the army does," and the work Friends' Unit is doing in constructing portable houses, reviving agricultural interests, establishing schools, etc., and not least in giving to these humble people in Eastern France and in far-away Russia, the right hand of Christian sympathy, is making a wonderful impression on the people who hear J. H. S. and others to whom the story he tells is carried. It is itself one of the very potent pieces of reconstructive work Friends are doing.—Ems.

THE QUAKER MINISTRY.—Closely associated with the spirit of the papers on "The Ministry," which appeared in THE FRIEND recently, is the following, sent to us by one deeply concerned that this foundation principle of Friends may suffer no tarnish at our handling.

THE QUAKER MINISTRY.—The development of his own gift of ministry was the master passion of John Wilhelm Rowntree, and second only to that was his desire to draw out the gifts of others. Consequently, in his paper on "The Problem of a Free Ministry," we find much to stimulate thought at the present time, when more than ever a vital, inspired, and informed ministry is so essential to our meetings.

"We may rejoice (he says) that Friends have never minimized the supreme prophetic gift," but "we must recognize that the dread of the human element has encouraged the spirit of indolence and lulled Friends into a belief that the minister must set no time apart for study or definite meditation. It is, however, not difficult to see that this fear of preparation has even wider consequences than those enumerated. It is closely associated with that strange haziness which characterizes the mind of the average Friend when questioned as to the historical and spiritual significance of his church."

"Let us remember, for we cannot escape the fact, that our free ministry is now upon its trial. No half measures will solve the problem which faces us. We would repeat that self-sacrifice may be the price of our ideal. . . . We seek not to stereotype our worship, nor to tamper with the freedom of spiritual dependence upon God, but to secure such a general condition of church life that spiritual growth shall be fostered and a high standard of spiritual intelligence shall be maintained. For want of proper nourishment the ideal of the free ministry is perishing before our eyes."

"We can do nothing without the patience of a faith that sees clear through apparent discouragement to its goal. We need the vision of the end, the sense of a high and worthy aim to spur us on, and, dependent on a Power greater than our own, we need the humble spirit which asks that it may be ever led by the Master's hand."

REPORT OF THE TREASURER OF THE AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE FOR WEEK ENDING FIFTH MONTH 11, 1918.

Received for Armenian and Syrian Relief	$ 31.00
Received for Supplies	28.50
Received from Meetings	14,950.99
Received from 19 Individuals	464.13

$15,474.62

CHARLES F. JENKINS,

Treasurer

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The following, received at our office a short time ago, we are glad to share with others.—Eds.]

SADDELSCOMBE, HASSECKS, SUSSEX, Fourth Month 5, 1918.

DEAR FRIEND:—

I feel I must again send thee my hearty thanks for continuing to post THE FRIEND to me. The number which has just arrived with its splendidly written review of Thomas Hodgkin's life, is especially interesting.

John T. Rowntree, also, was a much esteemed personal friend, and I am glad to see his wise words about birthright membership reaffirmed.

But I should like to know more of what your young men Friends are doing. Many of ours are splendid in their faithfulness all these weary months, and already a number of most thoughtful people are drawing to us as the only section of the Church which dares to stand for the Prince of Peace. If only the Society had all been faithful what a power we might have been! But fear and fashion are terribly strong things to face. I am much cut off from Friendly activities just now, at the old family farm "five miles from everywhere," which makes literature more valuable than ever.

I have been writing for the Summer number of the Friends' Examiner a sketch of early Quaker life on the Kent coast. It is called "Sally of the Basket Shop," and if thou thinks it will please your younger readers, thou art quite welcome to copy it. I have been amused to find how acceptable my very simple "Abraham's Oak" has been to Friends here.

Very sincerely,

MAUDE ROBINSON.

NOTICES.

IMPORTANT ANNUAL MEETING OF ASSOCIATED EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF FRIENDS ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.—The annual Meeting of the Associated Committee of Friends on Indian Affairs will be held at Arch Street Center (304 Arch Street) Philadelphia, on Third and Fourth-days, Fifth Month 28 and 29, 1918.

The first business session will be held on Third-day, at 2.30 P. M. At 7.30 P. M. of the same day will be held a meeting in the interests of the Indian work to which young Friends are especially invited.

New possibilities are opening before Friends in the Indian work and the meeting this year should be largely attended.

For further information address,

FLORENCE TRUEBLOOD STEERE, Secretary.

HAVENFORD, PA.

The Council of Westtown Mothers will have a Basket Picnic Supper at the School, on Seventh-day, Fifth Month 25th, to which the parents and guardians of all children now at the School are cordially invited. Children likely to be at Westtown next year, and their parents, are also included. Parents may invite to supper the friends of their children at the S-school. Hot coffee will be served by the School. Ice cream may be purchased on the lawn.

All those expecting to attend, will kindly notify Charles W. Palmer, Westtown School, in advance, stating the number in their party, and which train they would like to have met. Also, please send a list of the scholars they wish to have take supper with them.

Baseball game and tennis tournament with George School in the afternoon.

MARY R. WOOD,

President, Council of Westtown Mothers.

GEORGE L. JONES, Principal.

Trains leave Broad Street Station, Phila., 2.45 and 3.35 P. M. Trains leave Westtown, 6.48 and 9.37 P. M.

AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE.

FRIENDS' AND THE WAR CHEST CAMPAIGN.—During the week of Fifth Month 20-27, a campaign for the American Red Cross is to be carried on throughout the United States. In southeastern Pennsylvania (counties of Philadelphia, Chester, Delaware, Montgomery and Bucks) the Red Cross campaign has been merged into a so-called War Chest for several War-relief organizations, such as the Y. M. C. A., the Y. W. C. A., the Knights of Columbus, the Jewish War Relief Fund, etc. The relation of Friends to the Red Cross Campaign as carried on in New Jersey, Delaware, etc., is described in our Bulletin No. 14, and this statement will be confined to the War Chest Campaign.

All funds go into the War Chest un-ear-marked and are later appropriated to the several organizations according to the decision of the War Chest Committee. Friends' War Relief work is not included among those that will benefit by subscriptions made through War Chest solicitors. This means that subscriptions to Friends' Relief and Reconstruction Work must be made, as in the past, through Friends' channels—either through the collectors in local meetings or directly to Charles F. Jenkins. The arrangements made last year whereby subscriptions to Red Cross solicitors could be ear-marked for the Friends' Unit is not possible in this War Chest Campaign, because of its fundamental policy of having no subscriptions ear-marked for any special purpose. We shall report to the War Chest Committee the amount which is raised through Friends' channels for Friends' War Relief Work, which they can add to the total War Chest fund, as showing the total amount given by the people of Philadelphia and vicinity for war-relief work.

The Friends' Unit, although a Bureau of the Red Cross Civil Affairs Department, must be maintained by the direct contributions of Friends to our Treasury. The Red Cross officials at Washington thoroughly understand the situation and are willing that the Red Cross contributions of Friends should go through our own channels. They are tremendously interested in our work and are as anxious as we that it be maintained at the highest possible efficiency. It was even their generous suggestion that we carry on a special nation-wide campaign among Friends during the week of Fifth Month 20-27, which, however, we have decided not to do as a national policy. They have asked us to report to them the total sums we raise from the various parts of the country which will be included in Red Cross official reports.

We would suggest that War Chest solicitors be informed of the arrangement with Red Cross officials at Washington whereby they approve of Red Cross subscriptions largely going through our own channels for the Friends' Unit of the Red Cross. Friends should remember, however, that the War Chest includes other organizations than the Red Cross which Friends may wish to support.

WHY MAINTAIN A DISTINCTIVE "FRIENDS' UNIT?"—THE RED CROSS DESIRES IT.—When the American Red Cross Commission arrived in France, in 1917, they found the name "Des Amis," or Quakers, more prominently connected with civilian relief and reconstruction work than any other name. English Friends were "the largest private operators and the pioneers in reconstruction work in the devastated areas," to quote from a Red Cross official report. They had learned how to meet the needs of a situation for which there was no standard or precedent. The Red Cross Commission was interested in the problems of men and money, but their first and chief interest was to learn the "how" of the work to be done. They realized that for us to go poking our Yankee nose into the intimate sorrows of the French people without a fine, sympathetic understanding of the problem would be an international calamity. It is not surprising then that Homer Folks, Director of the Department of Civil Affairs, thus welcomed the first large group of our Unit:

"The Red Cross looks on the Society of Friends as in a sense its expert leaders. There is no group of people from whom we have already learned so much or from whom we expect to learn so much as the Friends."

The story has already been widely told of how it was the wish of the Red Cross Commission that our Unit become the link between it and the English Friends' Expedition, tapping for the Red Cross the great reservoir of the Friends' experience; how we are seeking to infuse in our American group that high spirit of devoted service which has been the secret of the Friends' success; how the Red Cross has asked us to send 300 more men this spring and summer; how French Officials have been asking the Friends' Mission to undertake more and more work—far beyond our present ability in men and money.

Units such as ours derive a great strength from the intimate ties that bind the men together, the smoothly working organization that can thus be developed and the high average standards of devoted service that are produced. The following statements by Red Cross men about our workers go to the heart of the reasons why the Red Cross wishes us to maintain our distinctive Unit. Such statements should create in those of us who must remain at home a humble resolve to hold up the hands of our workers abroad, and help them maintain a continued high standard of service.

"They work in the true religious spirit, asking no glory and no position; sharing the hardships they alleviate; and earning everywhere such gratitude from the French that the Government has offered to turn over a whole department to them if they will undertake all the work in reconstruction there."

"I am easily within the truth when I say that none of the Americans who have come to France for relief work within the past year have surpassed in spirit, intelligence or industry those who have been sent by the Friends' Committee in America."

"There was just one group, as a whole, with only two or three unimportant exceptions, stood up to every test and could always be counted on, and that was the Quakers. They had a certain solitary of discipline, a capacity for team work, which no other group showed."

CIRCUMSTANCES HAVE CREATED IT.

It is necessary for us to finance our own Unit in order to control the work and make it a distinctive expression of the service of all Friends in America. The work would lose its important significance if it were only the expression of the service of the few hundred workers who can go abroad; the really important thing is to make the work an expression of the service of the 100,000 Friends who must stay at home and furnish its support.

Our Unit has not created the circumstances which make it necessary; circumstances have created it. Opportunity has developed into obligation as the progress of events has carved out for us our distinctive tasks. We cannot justifiably do otherwise than carry on with efficiency and success the great trust that has been committed to our care.

THE CALL FOR A YOUNG MAN FOR STUDENT WORK IN TOKIO, JAPAN.—The Field—Within ten minutes' walk of the Friends' Mission in Tokio is Keio University, the most influential private university in Japan, with a student body of 1400, and its Preparatory Department of 1500. For several years Friends have been permitted to hold Bible Classes in the University, and it is generally recognized by other missions and Japanese churches that in a very special way Friends have access to the student field in this section of the city. This fact necessarily places a heavy responsibility upon us.

Methods of Work—These have developed along the lines of Bible Classes in the missionary home; lectures, social fellowship and religious conference; organized work with students and other young men who become Christians; Bible Conferences at the time of the Spring vacation, living with the young men for a whole week; Summer camps with Bible studies; training individual young men in actual Christian work with boys and young men; general work in helping to build up the Tokio meeting.

Plans for the Future—Funds are already in hand for building a dormitory for young men, with which would develop various religious and educational activities.

The Worker—For the past eleven years Horace E. Coleman has been in charge of the Tokio work for young men. From the summer of 1918 he feels that he should give his whole time to the interdenominational First-day School work. The call is urgent for a well-qualified young man to go out this Summer. The first two years on the field would be devoted to language study, but some English Bible classes could be taught from the beginning and plans developed for the future.

The Call—In this day, when many young men are gladly responding to the calls to service of a national and international nature, may there be a willing response to the call for a worker for Japan. It is an opportunity for the highest sort of reconstruction work; an opportunity to influence many of the future leaders of Japan.

Communications should be sent to Ellen W. Longstreth, Chairman, Candidates' Committee, Bryn Mawr, Pa.

WESTWOWN SCHOOL.—The stage will meet at Westwown Station trains leaving Broad Street Station, Philadelphia (Penna. R. R.), at 6.21, 8.21 A. M., and 2.45, 3.35, 4.55 P. M., other trains will be met on request. Stage fare twenty-five cents each way. To reach the School by telegraph, address West Chester, Bell Telephone, 1016.

E. DEAN STANTON,
Business Manager.

MEETINGS FROM FIFTH MONTH 19th TO FIFTH MONTH 25th:—

Western Quarterly Meeting, at Westgrove, Sixth-day, Fifth Month 24th, at 10 A. M.

Muncy Monthly Meeting, at Greenwood, Fourth-day, Fifth Month 22nd, at 10.30 A. M.

Frankford, Fourth-day, Fifth Month 22nd, at 7.45 P. M.

Haverford, Fifth-day, Fifth Month 23rd, at 7.30 P. M.

Germantown, Fifth-day, Fifth Month 23rd, at 10 A. M.

DIED.—At the home of his parents, in Plainfield, Ind., Eighth Month 4, 1917, WILLIAM B. ASHTON, in the thirty-seventh year of his age.

—, Third Month 19, 1918, ARSINOE P. MAXWELL, wife of Arthur B. Maxwell, in the forty-eighth year of her age; a member of Plainfield Monthly Meeting of Friends, Indiana.

—, Third Month 21, 1918, at Haverford College, GEORGE LANE, JR., aged eighteen years, only son of George and Bessie S. B. Lane, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

—, at West Chester, Pa., fourth of Fifth Month, 1918, ANNA M. HOOPES, wife of Levi Hoopes, M. D.; a member of Birmingham Monthly Meeting, Pa.

—, at Westwown, Pa., on Fifth Month 5, 1918, WILLIAM STANTON, in his seventy-ninth year; a member and Elder of Stillwater Monthly Meeting, Ohio.

—, on the seventh of Fifth Month, 1918, at Paoli, Pa., C. VIRGINIA SELLEW, widow of Edwin P. Sellow; a member and Minister of the Monthly Meeting of Friends of Philadelphia.

Is Your Life Insurance Adequate?

You will need more than $9000 to guarantee to your family a monthly income of fifty dollars for twenty years.

Write for information.

The Provident Life and Trust Co.

Of Philadelphia, Pa.

N. W. Cor. Fourth and Chestnut Sts.

H. F. BRUNER

S. D. HALL

H. F. BRUNER & Co.

COAL

OFFICE AND YARD

16 N. TWENTY-FIRST STREET

PHILADELPHIA

TELEPHONES: Locust 243
Rack 661

Friends Arch St. Centre

304 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Provides comfortable accommodations for guests by the day or week. Meals at moderate prices.

AMELIA D. FEATHERSTONE, Matron.

Phone—Market 1571.

WM. H. FILE'S SONS

BOOK AND JOB PRINTING

422 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO THE
PRINTING OF BOOKS AND CATALOGS

GLASLYN-CHATHAM

PARK PLACE

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

A Family House of Established Reputation.
Open Throughout the Year.

NATHAN L. JONES.

ALBERT C. RIDLEY
1734 SANSOM STREET

Engraving and Printing

FINE BUSINESS STATIONERY

Wedding Invitations, Calling Cards, Greeting Cards. Die Stamped Writing Paper

TELEPHONE—LOCUST 1782

M. GATCHEL

126 N. 21st St., PHILA.

MILLINERY, PLAIN AND FANCY

*Phone. Source 3632

POCONO MANOR INN

POCONO MANOR, PA.

SPRINGTIME in the Pocono Mountains is ever a delight to those who admire and study nature. The Birds and Flowers are numerous and varied, and the Trout Fishing in the Swiftwater is wonderful.

J. W. HURLEY, Manager
(Pocono Summit Station, D. L. & W. R. R.)

WOOLMAN SCHOOL

A Friends' School for Social and Religious Education.

Six Weeks Summer Term:

Seventh Month 1—Eighth Month 10, 1918.

Courses in Hebrew Prophecy, Teaching of Jesus, History of Friends in the Nineteenth Century, Social Service, First-day School Teaching for Children and Adolescents, The Bible in the Schools, and Internationalism.

Send for Circular.

ELBERT RUSSELL, Director,
WOOLMAN SCHOOL,
SWARTHMORE, PA.

W. B. WEAVER
UNDERTAKER and EMBALMER

550-552 N. 5TH ST., PHILA., PA.

Special Attention Given to Funerals
In and out of the City. Also Chapel
Accommodations for Funerals.

BELL *PHONE : ESTABLISHED 1880

To enjoy good health and a sound digestion use
PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT BREAD
made from the entire wheat grain ground on a stone mill. A perfect food and natural regulator. Sold by all good grocers in Philadelphia.

Write for particulars to

PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT CO.
10th & Susquehanna Ave., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

WALL PAPERS—All Grades
Custom of Friends Specially Selected
FRANK C. BUEHL
Successor to S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON
902 SPRING GARDEN ST., PHILADELPHIA
Store open until 10.30 A. M. Any other time by appointment only
Opposite Spring Garden Station, Phila. & Reading R. R.
ESTABLISHED 1849. BELL *PHONE.

"FRIENDS AND THE INDIANS"
FOR SALE AT $1.50 BY
FRIENDS' BOOK STORE
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

HARRY S. LEE
313 WALNUT STREET
PAINTER AND GRAINER

ANTIQUe and OFFICE FURNITURE RESTORED
JOBING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO
ESTIMATES

IF you are satisfied with your present printer stay by him. He deserves your support. If you are considering a change see

THE HOLMES PRESS

J Linton Engle, Pro. 1336 Cherry Street, Phila.

JOSEPH G. FOGG
FUNERAL DIRECTOR and EMBALMER

S. W. Cor. Sixteenth and Race Streets

Special attention given to Friends' Funerals

Bell *Phone : Spruce 1646

POCONO MANOR ASSOCIATION.

The Oakwood and Acorn Cottages, at Pocono Manor, will be opened about Sixth Month 20, 1918, for the accommodation of Friends, at moderate rates. Early application for rooms and board should be made to

LYDIA B. KITE,
Collingswood, N. J.

CAMP OWAISSA For Girls,

A modest-priced camp on Naomi Lake in the Poconos; central bungalow, with fine place and dining porch; all tents have raised floors, facing lake; swimming, basket-ball, horse-back riding, over-night hikes, etc.; Red Cross work; limited to thirty-five girls; counsellors all Friends.

EVALYN M. PAXSON,
No. 2414 Bryn Mawr Ave., Philada.

WANTED—IMMEDIATELY—A STENOGRAPHER.
Will pay prevailing rate of salary.

AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE,
20 South 12th Street, Phila., Pa.

WANTED—A FRIEND'S FAMILY OF THREE adults would like to take charge of a house in the suburbs, during the summer, while the owners are away.

Address R. S. B.
Care of "THE FRIEND,"
207 Walnut Place.

WANTED—A POSITION AS COMPANION, CARE of an invalid, or as house-keeper.

Address E,
55 East Stewart Avenue,
Lansdowne, Pa.

WANTED—A TEACHER FOR THE FRIENDS' School at West Chester, Pa., for the next term beginning in Ninth Month, 1918.

Address MARIAN S. PAINTER,
West Chester, Pa.

FOR RENT—EIGHT-ROOM FURNISHED Cottage, bath, open plumbing, hot and cold water, town and spring water. Several mails daily, half hour ferry service to Newport and Narragansett Pier. Excellent opportunity where there are one or more invalids in family. Meals must be taken at Maplewood.

Apply DR. W. LINCOLN BATES,
Jamestown, R. I.

FRIENDS' SCHOOL, AT ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., will need three experienced teachers for year 1918-19 for Seventh and Eighth grades, Fourth and Fifth grades.

Apply to Principals,
HELEN L. FORSTBE.

A FEW SUMMER BOARDERS CAN BE ACCOMMODATED at our farm; rates reasonable. Apply

SCIE R. SHARPLESS,
London Grove,
Chestor County, Pa.

Phone J. C. S.,
West Grove 164, R. 5.

WANTED—A COMPANION FOR A WOMAN Friend, in a suburban town.

Address "Z"—"THE FRIEND."

Cheyney Institute

offers an opportunity each year to one hundred picked colored youths to train themselves in leadership. No people have a more just claim on the sympathy and help of others than those colored people who have faith in the future of their race through wise training.

Cheyney Institute offers this training and has proved by its graduates that it merits generous support.

The Managers endeavor to administer the Trust they have assumed, but must look to Friends and others for financial assistance in the work for these one hundred young men and women.

The Institute also offers a unique course for teachers in its Summer School. Most of the Eastern and Southern States are represented at this School and testimonials of the advantages gained from the Summer courses would satisfy the most skeptical.

Leslie P. Hill, Principal, is always ready to offer timely suggestions to any who have it on their hearts to assist in the laudable work that is carried on at Cheyney.

Because of the conditions which must be met, if the School is to continue its good work, the Board of Managers feel free to request Friends to include Cheyney among the charities to which they contribute, and ask that checks shall be drawn in favor of and mailed to

WILLIAM BIDDLE, Treasurer,
119 S. Fourth St., Philadelphia.

RESIDENCE: 254 S. 44th St. BELL 'PHONE: Baring 2084-X

WILLIAM OAKES

Plumbing and Heating Contractor

ALSO LEAD BURNING

260 SOUTH TENTH STREET

PHILADELPHIA

BELL 'PHONE: Fubert 2066.

SEE WALKER & KEPLER

FOR

Good Electrical Work

531 CHESTNUT ST. -:- PHILA.

Philadelphia's
Representative Store

ELKINS, MORRIS & CO.

BANKERS

REPRESENTATIVES

PAUL W. BROWN
JAMES P. MAGILL

LAND TITLE BUILDING
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

RAILROAD AND PUBLIC UTILITY BONDS

FOR

CONSERVATIVE INVESTMENT.

FULL PARTICULARS ON REQUEST.

We recommend the use of

RAG FEATHERWEIGHT

(Antique Finish)

As the paper for high-grade Books and other Publications

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE MATERIAL THAT WE SELL

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY

MANUFACTURERS

PHILADELPHIA

ALFRED C. HAINES

Building Glass and Paints

56 N. Front St., Philadelphia.

R. C. Ballinger Ernest R. Yarnall John A. Stratton
TELEPHONES

Bell—Spruce 17-81 - - Keytown—Race 637

R. C. BALLINGER & CO.

CONTRACTORS and BUILDERS

218 N. Thirteenth St. Philadelphia.

Letchworth Cottage Spring Lake Beach, N. J.

Open for the Season 1918

A. C. & S. H. Letchworth

Established 1870 -:- Both Phones

Frank W. Taylor & Son

Roofers in Tin, Tile, Slate,
Copper and Slag,
Manufacturers of Ranges
and Furnaces

FURNACES, RANGES A HOT WATER SYSTEMS
installed and cared for by expert mechanics

259 S. FOURTH ST., PHILADELPHIA

Genealogist

Elizabeth R. Scattergood
44 E. Madison St., Camden, N. J.

Bonds Legal

for New York State and Massachusetts Savings Banks
Also suitable for Trust Funds

FOR the convenience of investors we have combined in booklet form
the official lists of Bonds Legal in New York and Massachusetts, which will be sent upon request.

Ask for Bonds Legal—PF-158.

The National City Company

Correspondent Offices in 24 Cities
Philadelphia—1421 Chestnut St.
Telephone—555 Locust
Bonds Short Term Notes Acceptances

SHETLAND PONIES

Oldest Herd in United States
Established 1883

Specially attractive prices just now owing to change in business arrangements

HARTZELL BROS., - SEBRING, OHIO
Importers and Breeders

FOR RENT—WERNERSVILLE, PA.

BUNGALOW

of 7 rooms, bath, electric lighting, running water, etc.
Near Gales Hall Hotel. For Seventh and Eighth Months.

TATNALL & CO.,

P. O. Box 298, WILMINGTON, DEL.

Premier Duplicating Co.

Mimeographing, Multigraphing, Printing, Typewriting, Addressing, Mailing, etc.

630 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 91.

FIFTH-DAY, FIFTH MONTH 23, 1918.

No. 47.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price $2.00 a year in Advance.

Publisher, DAVIS H. FORSYTHE.

Editors { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
 DAVIS H. FORSYTHE,
 MARY WARD.

Make remittances payable to

THE FRIEND,

No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

"I CAN NOT DO OTHERWISE."

A young Philadelphia Friend, now resident in the Middle West, who has allowed himself to be classed as a C. O., recently favored one of the editors with a piece of frank criticism. He had been in the valley of decision longer than some. He is a college man, a graduate of our oldest college, and as a student had specialized in sociology. After college he had participated from a most favored angle in organized social work. His effort to determine his obligations to the present military world-struggle had very naturally been from the social point of view. It seemed to him that THE FRIEND and the various Yearly Meetings had made this almost exclusively their point of view. "The social compact," the "social consciousness and conscience," life in terms of "others," all forced upon him, however, the logic of surrendering himself to the largest unit and so of joining the struggle against autocracy and "red-handed brigandage." It was only as he was driven into himself, and able to eliminate his relationships to his fellows in favor of his personal relationship to God, through Christ in his soul, that he had reached the positive position, "I must refuse military service at whatever cost." This position had suggested to him the well-known words of Martin Luther, "I can not do otherwise."

Without attempting to retrace all the steps of our young Friend, certain observations, frequently made, are brought into prominence by his experience. The present war has served, more perhaps than any that has preceded it, to show how the people of the whole world are actually bound together in a world-group. We cannot escape complicity in the present struggle. It faces us as we sit down to eat or as we rise up to pursue our daily tasks. The bread at our tables is war bread. The postage stamp or telephone message or railroad ticket is freighted with a war tax. We may indulge in some nice analysis and soothe our consciences with the thought that this is complicity with the world's suffering and not with the processes of warfare. The military authorities laugh at our inconsistency in such arguments, and go their satisfied way.

The young man in camp ponders the situation and is truly perplexed. If one who has specialized in this line of study as our young friend had under learned professors in college can not satisfy himself on this basis, need we wonder that many of our members, younger and older, are stumbled by it?

In reflecting upon the situation we may say that the social compact works in two directions, one constructive, the other destructive. We can not escape the latter. So much are we "members one of another," that we become partners in the evil of the whole group. It limits our liberty. In degree it affects our characters. Our only protection—our only service at times for the group is to struggle against the destructive tendencies and activities. We accept the effects of these tendencies, war bread, war taxes and the like, even cheerfully if need be, but they whet our determination and our efforts to work more vigorously for society on constructive lines. Our first step in this work may be to refuse voluntary participation in recognized destructive efforts. This refusal in the final analysis must be personal. It may, however, have been in part the basis of our membership in a specific group. We may be members of the Society of Friends on the basis of its constructive testimony and work. In any event, said Society and others like it have had such a record in constructive lines that the acts of Congress and executive orders have recognized membership in them as a valid objection to participation in the destructive processes of war, even at a time when the world seems almost entirely reduced to such processes. The repeated emphasis of this situation is probably the reason our kind critic has felt that our claim as an expositor of Friends' views, and the declarations of our several Yearly Meetings have been from the group point of view. We regard that point of view as tenable. Unless, however, it is reinforced by personal conviction based upon a Christian experience, it is lacking in an important element of serviceableness.

We have made more than one feeble effort in THE FRIEND (albeit we have not been feeble in desire) to emphasize this personal point of view. It surely never had more sublime emphasis than in the life and death of our Lord. For a Divine purpose He must have stood alone, on the personal ground of perfect relationship to the Father's will. Certainly in His day there were associations of religious people with whom He might have identified Himself, and to whom He might have given the tremendous power of "group functioning." He could not have been unaware of the mighty strength of united nationalism. Alexander and Cyrus were behind Him in time. Indeed, His followers constantly expected Him "to restore the Kingdom to Israel." He did not do it. Alone He went up to Jerusalem, to Gethsemane, to the cross, to the resurrection. By His method in the moment of crisis He put us beyond the authority of groups if we follow Him, and established us as personalities. There is no more momentous outcome of Christianity than this. It seems to take us out of groups and to set us apart with our Lord as individuals. As a matter of fact it gives us a new potency to be members of all legitimate groups upon a new basis. It is a principle that saves us absolutely for a constructive life.

When the war is over, President Wilson's courage in declaring for the validity of individual conviction in regard to military service will certainly be put down as one of the notable events of the whole struggle. Behind it we believe there is a profound political philosophy, as well as a tender consideration for religious sanctions. It may not be carried into effect without many delays and many hardships. It will be a pole star for enlightened reconstruction. Once in history the sentiment, "I can not do otherwise." I must stand by my conviction, made a new religious world under Luther's leadership. Today the same spirit, where honestly held, contains the hope of the "New Freedom," of which our President has been a prophet. The destructive powers may prevail for a moment, but even they can ill afford to persecute those who stand unflinchingly for construction. Personal conviction, the "I can not do otherwise" of our friend, has led individuals and groups out into the war zone for very notable reconstruction work, just as certainly as it has led others into repeated terms of imprisonment as a protest against the assumption that conscience must be surrendered to the state. These are two poles of the one position. The President's order in regard to non-combatant service recognizes them both. Shall we do less?

Historically, it is of interest to observe how the two points of view—the negative and positive electricity, have combined to make militant groups. Not infrequently it is protest, apparent negation—"I can not do other than refuse this or that exaction of authority," that has drawn a following of ardent souls. Such a following, however, has not—can not be held together by negation. It becomes alive in proportion as it finds positive lines of constructive work. "I can release the slaves," "I can reform prisons," "I can put down the drink traffic," "I can be a force for good in politics." These are lines that give groups a living content. Those inside the group may feel how inadequate this positive expression has been. If there has been enough of it to gain public recognition let us take heart and be stimulated to faithfulness to both our personal and our group responsibilities. The two to us are "one and inseparable." If at times in THE FRIEND we seem to present the one at the expense of the other, it is due to the exigencies of the moment, not to any actual divorce of the two responsibilities. Their relationship should be kept in view, not only because they are both essential to growth, but also because the one is a safeguard of the other—the group a safeguard of the individual. J. H. B.

FIRST IMPRESSIONS OF CANTON CHRISTIAN COLLEGE.

ANNE B. HOWARD.

[Several readers of THE FRIEND have an intimate acquaintance with A. B. H. and have known of her work in other foreign fields. A brief selection from the personal letter which accompanied this paper is added as containing interesting information.—Eds.]

It has seemed to me that perhaps the enclosed article might be of interest to the readers of THE FRIEND. Our College here is a wonderfully interesting place and the work one with which Friends would have much unity. This is true apart from the fact that five of the foreign staff members of our Society and one of the Chinese staff a Friend at heart, though not a member.

In these days we need sometimes to review the constructive work being done in order to encourage our faith, and I wish Friends in America might realize the part they have in this work for the regeneration of China—therefore, this contribution to THE FRIEND.

We have been here a little more than four months and are as happy as it is possible to be when so far separated from dear ones in America. Our little spot of earth seems remote from the war, and unless we choose to we need not read the newspapers. It is more possible here than in America to go quietly on working, and for the children it is a blessing to be out of the atmosphere so nearly universal to-day.

The location of the College is most pleasing, with beautiful scenery about us. This is another cause for thankfulness.

We also very much enjoy the little group of foreigners located here.

In these days, when all hearts are burdened with the havoc and destruction of war, it is a privilege beyond the ordinary to be able to report work of a deeply constructive nature, even in a remote part of the world.

Canton Christian College is doubtless already quite familiar to readers of THE FRIEND through articles contributed by Dr. Wm. W. Cadbury during the nine years he has been here. It is one of the true centres of light amid the vast darkness of ignorance, poverty, superstition and sin in which the millions of this great nation are engulfed. Other efforts are being made to bring to the youth of China the benefits of an education along Western lines, but nowhere else is greater effort being made to place first emphasis on Christian character as a foundation for progressive education. Every phase of the College life; the exercises of the class-room, the wholesome play on the athletic ground, the social gathering in a faculty home as well as the religious services and instruction in the Scriptures, has as its recognized purpose the bringing of the individual students into a personal experience of the Christian life.

In former years it has been customary to set some day during the Spring months and give to such students as have been led to become Christians an opportunity to make a public confession of their faith. This year Sherwood Eddy has been holding meetings in various parts of China in connection with local branches of the Y. M. C. A., and was announced for Canton for the latter part of the Second Month. Our student Christian Association here at the College decided to make no further plans for a "decision day" until after the visit of the Eddy party.

Both faculty and Christian students felt a very real concern for the non-Christian students on our campus. A room in Swasey Hall, the Christian Association Building, was set apart for the use of students who wished to withdraw from the distractions of the dormitories for a time of quiet prayer and communion.

When the final plans for the Eddy meetings became known here, it was evident that our students could have little part in them. The difficulty of taking several hundred students back and forth on the river between the College and the Y. M. C. A. in Canton proved practically insurmountable, and the small size of the Y. M. C. A. auditorium also made it impossible to accommodate all who wished to attend.

When Sherwood Eddy learned the circumstances, that there was here at the College a large company of students who were earnestly considering their relation to Christ, and that it would be impossible for many of them to attend the meetings in town, he arranged to come out here for one address.

On Fourth-day morning, Second Month 27th, the auditorium of Swasey Hall was completely filled with students, faculty, workmen, servants and villagers, who had come to listen to the message. The message was a most appropriate and timely one. The great potential power of China, her ancient civilization, her vast population and immense riches of minerals, agriculture and possible industry and commerce were contrasted with her equally great poverty and lack of progress. The reason for the poverty and stagnation was shown to be a lack of honest men in positions of responsibility. That Western education alone does not give moral character has been demonstrated by the pitiful failure of the leaders of the revolution to stand the test of power. The only thing which can save China is men of integrity of character and Christianity, making possible the highest moral character, is thus the only hope for China.

The address, which lasted for about an hour, was forceful but unemotional. At its close an opportunity was given to those who wished it known to their fellow-students that they would become the followers of Christ to stand. Our hearts were thrilled by the response which came over a hundred rose to their feet. This was no yielding to a sudden emotional appeal, but the quiet, thoughtful, deliberate decision of earnest-hearted students who see in the Christian religion the only hope for themselves and for their country. In many cases it involves a courage and determination of which we can have little idea as it means loss of money, possibly of any further education, and at least a temporary alienation from their families. To them the words of the Master, "he that loveth father or mother more than Me is not worthy of Me" are very real.

At the close of that day the College campus was almost as light as day in the brightness of the full moon shining in a cloudless sky. As the foreign staff gathered together for an hour our voices were silenced by the depth of feeling, for to us all had come a manifestation of the working of the Spirit of God such as we had never experienced before. For that hour the tragedy of the great world outside was shut out as we yielded our hearts to the "peace which passeth all understanding."

As a result of the decisions publicly witnessed to on this occasion, we are now to a remarkable extent a truly "Christian" college. There are still a few non-Christian students in the sub-freshman and freshman classes, but all the members of the three higher classes in the College and of the third year Middle School are now Christians. The reality of the new life is being evidenced not only in the expression of their faces, but in the earnestness with which they are giving themselves in service for others, in schools for servants and workmen on the campus and in schools and religious meetings in the nearby villages.

Following closely upon this time of deepened religious feeling has come the appeal for help for the starving millions in North China. The Chinese have been notoriously indifferent to such suffering and it has been left to America and Europe to meet the needs in past years. That Christianity is able to transform the Chinese heart and implant impulses of self-sacrifice and sympathy is being shown by the request of hundreds of our boys to be allowed to go on half-rations in order to send money to feed the starving. Faculty and students are being drawn into a closer bond of union in these days when the stress of famine and wars is being keenly felt. On the single item of exchange the war has added $20,000 annually to the expenses of the College without any increase whatever in the work itself. As the College is non-sectarian it does not have any of the large missionary boards behind it, and as it has no endowment, it is dependent wholly upon individual gifts for support. In these days when the individual giver is being besieged by appeals to give to the Red Cross, the Y. M. C. A., Army Work, and to various other funds connected with the war, it is proving difficult to get even the support required in times of peace. To each of us, students and faculty alike, has come the necessity for genuine self-denial if we are to be able to continue, during the war, this great work upon which there has been so signally placed the mark of Divine approval.

FOR "THE FRIEND."

HISTORIC FRIENDS AND WAR.

A statement signed by some one hundred and twenty of the "Other Branch" of Friends may or may not be conclusive in its argument. The Biblical portion seems to me to be weak and distorted. But the part to which I wish to object is the list of names mentioned to give the impression that Friends in the past have supported war. This is a question of history and not of sentiment. The list includes the following: William Penn, James Logan, John Dickinson, Nathaniel Greene, Israel Whelen, Thomas Mifflin, Jacob Brown, John Bright and John G. Whittier.

There are two facts in William Penn's life which may be considered in this direction. He accepted a Charter for Pennsylvania, which made him Captain General of its army with ample powers. He never exercised this function. It was common in the provincial charters of the time, and as Pennsylvania had no army, and as Penn knew he would not create one, he probably accepted it as a form without which the Charter would have been refused.

Again in his "Plan for the Peace of Europe" he provides for a judicial court and if any nation refused to submit its claims or to abide by the decisions then the other nations "united as one strength shall compel the submission and performance of the sentence." This may mean diplomatic or economic pressure or it may mean an international police. He does not say, but he may have included the latter as an extreme measure.

Against these we have Penn's definite statement frequently repeated that war is wrong. He said that Friends "can not fight for it (the state) neither can they fight against it." So far as I know there is nothing to indicate that he ever changed his views that he or his Society could take no part in warlike operations, however just the cause.

James Logan is a fair argument. He believed in defensive war, argued for it openly and was a member, not conspicuous in church affairs, but greatly respected for his character and ability. His position as to warfare was definitely repudiated by his Yearly Meeting.

John Dickinson was probably never a Friend. He certainly was not the latter part of his life, and as he challenged a political opponent to a duel in his youthful activities and in other ways betrayed no Quaker sympathies, he apparently was not born a Friend. But the records are not very clear in the matter.

Generals Greene and Mifflin in the Revolutionary War, and Jacob Brown in the War of 1812, were disowned for their martial activities and in no way represented Quakerism.

Israel Whelen is a name which I have not known except in this connection, nor does some inquiry in Biographical Dictionaries and elsewhere add anything to my information. I must, therefore, leave him out of the account.

John Bright is probably a fair argument for the protestors. While he declared that all the English wars of his time were unjustifiable, and resigned his place in the Cabinet as a protest against one of them, he never (as I am told by reliable authority) would agree to a radical statement against all war. He also wrote a letter to Charles Sumner, expressing a hope that our Civil War would not end until slavery was destroyed. He was greatly esteemed by Friends, but his Yearly Meeting is not with him.

John G. Whittier never, so far as I know, enunciated any sentiment favorable to war. He vigorously opposed slavery, but we may presume that his views are expressed by:

"Perish with him (John Brown) the folly,
That seeks through evil, good;
Long live the generous purpose
Unstained by human blood."

In all fairness the list reduces itself to James Logan and John Bright, with the possible addition of Israel Whelen. If, therefore, as our signers ask, we should "well consider the experience and judgment" of these historic characters and their right to speak for the Society of Friends, we do not derive much encouragement in the line of thought suggested by the paper.

ISAAC SHARPLESS

"To be, is more powerful than even to do. Action may be hypocrisy, but being is the thing itself, and is the parent of action."

SONGS IN THE HEART.

There are songs in the heart that are never sung
To the finest chords of the spirit string,
Like the deeper currents of the ocean stirred
Whose low, deep symphonies sweep unheard.
There are songs of gladness which fill the earth
With beauty of flowers and the joy of mirth,
There are songs of gladness and the voice of birds,
There are songs of sadness too deep for words.

There are songs of sorrow through all the years,
Whose only language is silent tears,
Where the wrong has triumphed, or hope is riven,
Like the dove o'er the shoreless ocean driven,
There are songs of rapture which thrill the soul
When thoughts of God and of heaven thrill,
They wake in the spirit like visions bright,
There are songs that are voiceless but swift as light.

There are songs of triumph, unheard, untold,
As the silent splendors of the day unfold,
Where it conquers night as the falling breath
Oft calms the smile on the lips of death.
There are songs of peace and unspoken rest
Which come to the spirit to make it blest,
From heights of glory by seraphs trod,
On the wings of prayer, from the hills of God.

PHILADELPHIA.

—ANONYMOUS.

THE AKASAKA HOSPITAL AT TOKIO.

GILBERT BOWLES.

The war affects the gifts of English Friends for Japan.

On Second Month 11th each year, the Japanese celebrate the ascension to the throne of their first Emperor, Jimmu Tenno. At that celebration this year, the Emperor announced special honors for two foreigners who had rendered conspicuous service to Japan. One of these was an American, Dr. Willis Norton Whitney, founder of the Akasaka Hospital. At the time of the publication of this Imperial Order, a prominent Japanese stated that one of the most powerful factors in overcoming Japanese bitterness and prejudice against Christianity, a bitterness which kept the death penalty hanging over every Japanese Christian as late as 1873, was the devotion of Willis Norton Whitney to his mother, when as a young man he lived with his mother within the grounds of Count Katsu in Tokio, near the present site of the hospital.

As a young man Dr. Whitney learned the Japanese language and served as interpreter at the American Legation in Tokio. His knowledge of the language and his rare spirit of sympathy and sacrificial love gave him unusual access to the lives of many Japanese. After giving the greater part of his life to the Japanese people, mainly in connection with the Akasaka Hospital, Dr. Whitney was invalided home to England nine years ago and there is no hope of his ever being able to return to Japan.

From a small beginning as a dispensary, the work gradually grew in an effort to meet increasing needs. There are now twenty-eight beds in the Hospital. The largest work is in the care of the out-patients of whom there were 1862 last year. There are one foreign and two Japanese physicians, one Japanese oculist and ten Japanese nurses. Because of the great demand in Japan for treatment of eye-diseases, Dr. Whitney himself took a special course in London and later gave much time to development of that department. Influenced by the stories of those who have been helped, Japanese men and women often travel long distances to reach the Hospital.

But what has this story to do with English Friends and the present war? Much, in every way. Dr. Whitney's wife, Mary Caroline, is a daughter of J. Bevan Braithwaite. After Dr. Whitney, with his associate Japanese doctor, had carried the responsibility for the Hospital for some years, it was incorporated in 1902 under the laws of Japan and a group of Friends in London organized the Akasaka Hospital Committee to assume responsibilities at the home base for collecting funds to help support the growing work. Though the Board of Directors and the Committee of Management in Japan are interdenominational, practically all of the funds, except receipts from patients, have been given by Friends in Great Britain, assisted by gifts from Baltimore and College Park Friends. The first year of the war brought such heavy drains upon English Friends as to reduce their donations from about £500 to £300 a year. Last year the total from Friends in Great Britain, besides the support of the foreign doctor, was £179. This left an average monthly deficit in the current expenses last year of $202. It is this situation, caused by the war drain upon English Friends, which now threatens the existence of the Hospital.

In view of the financial needs and the call for further developments in the work, the London Committee decided last year to seek the co-operation of Friends in America in the "ownership, support and management of the Hospital." If this help can be secured, the entire management on the field will be put in the hands of Friends. This is desired by the present members of the Board of Directors and the Committee of Management, even those who belong to other denominations, because it is believed that it would increase the efficiency of the Hospital without lessening the interest of other Christians.

Another interesting situation arose last year, independent of financial questions. That was in connection with the Christian work, which has always been an essential part of the Hospital activities. Two Japanese workers, one man and one woman, not Friends, give full time to visiting in the homes of the patients and former inmates, and to other lines of Christian work. A simple organization of Christians, called "The Gospel Society" has been formed, entrance into membership being made without any outward forms, except simple confession of faith in Christ. The members of this Society and the workers, including some of the doctors and nurses, have of themselves come to desire earnestly the formation of a Friends' Meeting in connection with the Hospital. This desire of the Japanese Christians has been approved by the interdenominational Committee of Management, but pending the solution of financial problems and the decision as to the whole future of the Hospital, no further action has been taken.

But do not the Japanese maintain good hospitals of their own? Yes, but most of them are beyond the reach of the common people. A few years ago the Head Physician at the Tokio Red Cross Hospital said that nine-tenths of the poor of Tokio were without medical care. Since then three charity hospitals have been erected in Tokio, but these take only a limited number of extreme cases. The best work which the Akasaka Hospital does is in caring for those who are just below the line of self-support, most of them paying from one-fourth to three-fourths of their fees. Full pay patients are also taken.

The whole future of the Hospital is at stake. So far as can now be seen, assistance from American Friends is the only thing that will prevent the doors of the Hospital from being closed. Some ask why not tear down the present buildings, which are unsuitable for an efficient hospital for the future, and maintain only a dispensary with a small expenditure of money. When in the past a shortage in the staff has compelled closing the Hospital to in-patients, the number of out-patients has rapidly decreased. The Hospital is sorely needed in Japan. It is one of the most effective ways of doing definite Christian work, giving the Gospel message to receptive hearts. It has been built up and maintained at great sacrifice. It is appreciated by the Japanese people, as shown by the fact that out of the total receipts of $8898 the past year, the sum of $4054 was received from patients and the sale of medicines. The Government has for several years past been giving an annual grant, small, but expressive of appreciation and confidence. If maintained, the Hospital will give to Friends in the future a very special opportunity to express to the Japanese people in terms of international service their committal to applied Christianity. None of the Friends in Japan would for a moment wish to jeopardize any existing work in order to realize this hope, but here is a very special opportunity and an urgent call to permanent reconstruction work, in accord with the spirit which is everywhere challenging Friends to service and sacrifice.

At present there is no definite appeal for funds for building and equipment. The immediate need is for approximately $200 a month to meet the monthly deficit in the running expenses, supplementing the gifts of English Friends, regular hospital receipts and contributions in Japan. If the Hospital can thus be tided over for one or two years—and provision ought thus to be made for two years—and in the meantime definite plans can be made for the future plant, also for the management and support of the Hospital, it is believed on the testimony of responsible Japanese (including one member of the Tokio City Council and one member of Parliament) that a substantial sum can be raised in Japan toward an adequate plant and equipment. The above mentioned Japanese would then be ready to take responsibilities for helping to raise such a fund, perhaps as a memorial to Dr. Whitney, which would make special appeal to his Japanese friends.

Any Friends who would like to have a share in contributing the sum of at least $2400 a year for one or two years may send their gifts to Wm. B. Harvey, 304 Arch Street, Philadelphia, or to Dr. Edward G. Rhoads, 153 W. Coulter Street, Germantown, Philadelphia.

Inquiries about the Hospital may be addressed to Gilbert Bowles, 20 S. Twelfth Street, Philadelphia.

LETTERS FROM FRANCE.

GRUNY, Third Month 19th.

DEAR SISTERS:—

To-day the heavens have sprinkled us intermittently all day long, after about three dry weeks, and once more our rain barrels are full, which means we shall not have to carry well-water to wash with for at least a week or more. But it seems that Winter is well past at last and the other day when we happened to be working on a roof in the direct sunlight, it was almost unbelievable how comfortable we were after taking off coats, sweaters and hats, and everything is beginning to grow in earnest now, especially the deep-blue hepaticas and violets of the really fragrant sort; gooseberry bushes are breaking bud and the pussy-willows have long since swelled the "pussies" into real cats. The days are light so much longer now and the farmers are always out early for a good long day.

One woman (who has a lean face, deep-set eyes, sharp hook nose and a sort of uncanny look) happens to be the healthiest person in this whole region, and as such is the lucky owner of a fine flock of about 150 sheep, and during the Winter when the little lambs came, they were carefully sheltered in a big barn. Now, however, the lambs are sturdy little things and are being sent out to the field with the big flock; they are a sight! I wish the little folks at home could see the white fluffy little bunches, always losing their mothers and saving so, loudly; being rounded up into the flock by a careful, alert, intelligent grey dog that seems tireless.

The story goes that this woman (who has received a nickname by the fellows) realized that when the soldiers were coming through, it was the safest thing to move out a little faster than they were moving in, so she hurried her sheep off to a safe region, and though a number of them died from exposure and starvation, she had a goodly nucleus left and soon will have a fine flock again. They have had excellent grazing opportunities this Winter, because there have been so many fields all around the village that were unoccupied. There was a wonderfully picturesque old crippled man who took them out all during the cold weather, and who would sit on a little stool, wrapped up in a great poncho—blanket with a hood for his head. He would stay out there all day long, leading them from one place to another, and giving the various commands, whereupon the faithful old shaggy dog would rush at a straying sheep, or string them all along so as to get them comfortably into a narrow road. This shrewd woman, who owns the sheep, has also six horses, several cows, a number of chickens, some pigs and rabbits, but in spite of this she had the nerve to ask some relief bureau for five more pigs! At another time she tried to get our agricultural fellows to loan her their two horses for plowing! That is evidence of unquestionable ambition, but is disgustingly selfish, all the same.

Last week end, one of the fellows and I went off on a little excursion over to our équipe at Ham, having been asked over to join with Ernest Brown. We had a glorious day for the fifteen-mile bicycle ride, and the roads were all dry and hard, which added to the pleasure. Somehow, we reached Ham too late for lunch and had to wait till supper for nourishment. During the afternoon, Jiggs and I saw parts of two soccer games between teams of "Tommyies" and then in the evening with Brown and two young Frenchmen we went up to a French lady's home and had a pleasant evening. We left about 9.30 and there were two of us at least who were tired enough to sleep without worrying whether the pillow had no case on it or the cot no mattress.

First-day afternoon three of us set out again on a bicycle journey. . . . Of course, one of the boys had a puncture, which brought our speed down to a walk, but at last, about 4 p. m., we reached the remains of a one-time château of considerable grandeur. There was a moat around the wall, great tall trees in large numbers, then the château itself, a medium-sized building, almost worthless now, since only the brick walls are standing. There were remnants of happier days, such as a small conservatory, and various out-buildings, gardens, etc., but the more important features were several little huts of demountable type, and one good-sized barrack, which are all housing about fifteen Smith College girls, who have been doing relief work for quite a time there and in the nearer villages. They kindly loaned us a new inner tube for the punctured bicycle and after that was fixed we went into the great, light, high-ceiling living room, where all the guests are entertained. Tea was served very informally to quite a number of young men who had dropped in. . . . It was rather thrilling, riding home in the moonlight, about 11 p. m., passing through little villages without a single light showing and seeing rows of skeleton houses with the moonlight shining through them. Over at one side the sky was continually lighted by great flashes and in one location the large brilliant star shells would glow and fall, one after the other, still very clear and white, though some miles away. There were almost no sounds whatever, and one could scarcely realize that the great war line might be only twenty or thirty miles away.

We thoroughly enjoyed the cool ride along a well-paved "pike" with a continuous row of great, tall trees on each side and the miles just disappeared in the shadows behind us, for in these parts no light of any kind shows at night. Of course, it was not flattering to the Smith girls' tea, but we were so hungry when we arrived that the sardines and cheese, jam and cold oat-meal hardly offered any resistance whatever, and if there had been anything else in the larder it must certainly have gone the same way, but our searches showed only box after box of unappetizing raw things, like rice and macaroni and canned goods that do not lend themselves readily to mid-night lunches.

It was quite a change from our usual week-ends in Grunzy, and did us both a heap of good, because one is very apt to fizzle in a little isolated place like this.

Charles Evans was up here last week for two days, looking the place over, and he rather surprised me by asking if I would care to be transferred to a hospital that is to be fixed up, saying that an older fellow who has been doing a great deal of electrical wiring, etc., in this hospital work is to be needed for some special photographic work and I was apparently considered as the logical substitute for the electrical work. . . . We have become pretty much attached to our little place here and to the work, too, but I suppose it would really be better to get into a line of work which would give me some practical experience of a sort that may come in especially handy.

I have definitely decided not to return home at the end of my nine months' period, partly because the work is too important and vital. . . . Well, it is 5.45 to-morrow morning to get breakfast, so enough till the next time.

PARVIN M. RUSSELL.

"ALL WHICH IS REAL NOW REMAINETH."

All which is real now remaineth

And fadeth never;

The hand which upholds it now sustaineth

The soul forever.

Leaning on Him, make with reverent meekness

His own thy will,

And with strength from Him shall thy utter weakness

Life's task fulfil.

And that cloud itself, which now before thee

Lies dark in view,

Shall with beams of light from the inner glory

Be stricken through.

And like meadow mist through autumn's dawn

Uprolling thin,

Its thickest folds when about thee drawn

Let sunlight in.

Then of what is to be, and of what is done,

Why queriest thou?

The past and the time to be are one,

And both are Now!

—JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER.

A WEEK'S FLIGHT WITH FRENCH REFUGEES.

ERNEST L. BROWN.

[Not a word of apology is called for by the appearance of the following letter of E. L. B. and another to be given our readers later from Jos. H. Haines. Some of the incidents narrated in these letters may have been given in less detail in other letters which we have published.

It must be remembered that this special side of the "war story" is not written up so well by any others and these "home letters," a few years hence, will be valuable history. We have just heard of a University Library in N. E. which is to have a complete file of THE FRIEND covering the period of the war, this on account of the value attached to these letters from the boys of the Reconstruction Unit. Again we take the opportunity of thanking the "home circle," to whom the letters belong, for the favor they have done us.—Eds.]

FOURTH MONTH 6, 1918.

I will have to condense the account of recent happenings, both because of the censorship and for lack of time to write more fully.

To begin with, on the morning that the great offensive started, the guns commenced to roar at about 4.30 A. M., so that we could hardly sleep and soon we could hear the shells whistling by and bursting near the station. We concluded it would be well to get up and see what was doing. We did so, some of the fellows went to their work and we chauffeurs worked on our cars. About 10 A. M. word came in that the Germans were advancing and that villages up the line had orders to evacuate by train. We went out to assist if we could and "Fritz" was slinging shells in every little while.

After the civilians were all on the train which was waiting for them, we went on out to evacuate our own boys who were still further toward the front. It was just about as hot territory as I ever want to be in, with shells exploding along the sides of the roads and the Allied artillery right over the other side of a big hill from where we were, making a terrible noise.

The wounded were coming in by the hundreds in ambulances and trains. The following morning we were awakened at 5.30 by the town crier going around with a bell and telling all civilians to leave the town by either the 7.30 A. M. or 10 A. M. train. I dressed at once and got right busy with the motor truck hauling people and baggage to the station. All of our own crowd left on the ten o'clock train, except Sid Brown, our other chauffeur and six others. We started out with the two cars, going different ways toward Paris. I drove to a town about twelve miles away where there was an American Red Cross officer, who asked us to stay and help in a number of villages which he knew were going to be evacuated. Preston, Greist and myself stayed and helped to evacuate and settle the refugees in a large college building, while the Germans were still coming on.

That night, about 11.45, we were through with helping the people and then started back to the town where our headquarters had been, to bring out our food stores. I will never forget that ride as long as I live. It was moonlight with a thick fog covering the ground. We drove twelve miles and at about 1.15 A. M. we crossed the bridge into the town and then stopped to listen. There was not a sound except the occasional bark of a machine gun. It seemed strange that there was no more noise, but we went on into the town, loaded up our supplies and got ready to pull out about 3 A. M. We met some British outpost sentries who said they didn't know where the Germans were, but that they were expecting them into the town before long. We thought we might as well leave, as by now the machine guns seemed to be shooting pretty lively. Just before we pulled out we met four "Tommys" wheeling a boy on a stretcher who had machine-gun bullets in his thigh and arm and who was bleeding badly. They stopped us and asked us to take him on to a hospital. As the large hospital nearby had been cleared out, the nearest one was about nine miles away, so we put him on top of the load with two of the fellows that were with him. The fog was getting thicker, but we could see about fifty feet ahead. We could, of course, have no lights and started on slowly. The first thing I knew I had run my left front wheel into a large shell hole big enough to bury a three-ton truck, but fortunately by a quick jerk, I ran my right wheel up on a bank and got safely around the place. It was then fairly easy driving for awhile. We passed about five miles of retreating horse artillery. Ahead of the artillery came more equipment, tractors and what not, and it took some two-and-a-half to three hours to go a distance of perhaps twenty kilometres. We arrived at our repair group about 4 to 6 A. M. I do not know the exact time, as all our watches had stopped. We found our fellows all ready to pull out with their stuff loaded into the carts of our agricultural department. I immediately unloaded the food stores and used the car to take out all of the people who wished to be evacuated, but some of them preferred to stay and take their chances. As the village was small and the people few, I soon finished and went back to the Red Cross warehouse, packing up my food stores again en route.

The following day was spent in hauling mattresses for the refugees who had come from the villages nearby. About noon of the next day they sent me out to help evacuate a village ten miles away to the east, telling me that I would be back that night very late, or at least the next day before noon. As a result, I left everything that I owned at the warehouse, even leaving my uniform coat and wearing a leather one, as I knew there would be a lot of work to do and I wanted to keep it clean. They kept me four days on that job, however, and by that time the Germans had occupied the town I had left. I lost, therefore, almost all my clothing, my mandolin, my gold watch, $40.00 in American Express Company checks and some rather valuable tools belonging to the Motor Department.

At the next village to which we were moved we stayed two days, with the guns getting heavier all the time, until we had gotten all the people out and most of the food stores. I had been sleeping in a cellar, in my motor truck, in the back of a Ford car and in various other places, and did not take off my clothes, except my shoes, for nearly a week. On the third morning at this village they routed us out at about 3 A. M., saying that a gas attack had been launched, and that we had better leave. This we did with our gas masks all ready for an emergency, but nothing startling happened.

Again we were transferred to another evacuation centre and by this time Hainer Hinshaw and I with the "Garner" car were the only ones of the "Mission des Amis" left in that particular district. From there I was sent to a large town directly on the road to Paris, about eight or nine miles from where the Germans were, and at this place I had an opportunity to tune up my car, scrape out the carbon, etc. This town or rather city, had been completely evacuated and the Red Cross had a whole hotel turned over to them and there I slept in a real bed. It was some experience to feel a bed under you after sleeping in all kinds of places. "Fritz" soon commenced to shell this place, particularly the railroad, and we went to bed in the cellar the second night. After being there about three days, some more of our crowd came in with the "White" car and then we all pulled out for Beauvais, where I am located at this writing with the American Red Cross. Our work now consists in meeting trains, caring for the refugees that come in from the villages up the line and sending them on down to the south of France as soon as we can get enough to make up a train load. We have sent out two trains since I have been here, one of six hundred and one of eight hundred people, but the stream is lessening now and unless the Germans come on farther we will be out of a job here soon.

It is a heart-rending sight to see these people driven out with just what stuff they can carry with them. I have taken them out of their homes with the ear-splitting guns all around, packed their stuff and moved them away. I have walked through an entire city the size of West Chester, Penna., or larger, all intact, but with not a single civilian in it. It is sad, sad business and I for one will rejoice when it is all over. Not for my own sake, but for thousands of miserable people we have helped to move out of war's pathway during the past two weeks.

I am thankful that I am somewhat of an optimist.

AN OREGON TRAIL.

(Continued from page 631.)

We learned that one home had just been saddened by the death of a child of twelve. We persevered through mud and rain and finally came to the door. Upon entering we found a group of sorrowing relatives—the weeping father, his mother and perhaps grandmother, a step-mother of the dead child, with a baby in arms. There was not lacking that solemnity which death brings to the feeling heart and we were all quite touched. It was evident by the crosses on the wall and by the candle by the covered corpse that the family were devout Catholics. Our priest-friend spoke to them very tenderly and then recited the prayers considered appropriate to the occasion. This unexpected incident seemed to bring us very near to the deep springs of Indian nature, and the red eyes and bowed head of a weeping father emphasized the common humanity, and Divinity, too, in which we all share.

That evening was the "social hour" at the Cushman School. It was devoted chiefly to "civilized" dancing. We were assured that nothing more serious than "two steps" were allowed. How serious that may be in the government's Indian policy may appear in a later recital.

The Nisqually Reservation embraces about 3300 acres of ground, but the number of Indians on it is reduced to thirty-five. The reservation adjoins Camp Lewis and the expansion of the training grounds there makes it necessary, in the Government view, to acquire it from the Indians. The State of Washington had begun condemnation proceedings to secure the land as a gift to the War Department. Naturally, the Indians were somewhat perturbed and anxious to have speech with "the big man from Washington" on the subject. To see any considerable proportion of the thirty-five without previous notice would have been difficult, had it not transpired that the day in the month was at hand when our host at St. George's would celebrate mass at the Nisqually chapel. As this would probably be the last time he would use the chapel it was believed there would be a full attendance. Our "Silent Knight" was again in service and showed good quality in conflict with bad roads. As we sped along, Superintendent Hammond, whose company we had not had the day before, entertained us with a good store of observation and incident in regard to Indians. In one reservation three religious denominations maintained missions. There were eight Catholics, six Presbyterians and four "Shakers." Some explanation of this cult is made in another connection. One Indian woman claimed membership in all three on the theory that she might thus acquire the good of all. How little fundamental denominational difference may appeal to the Indian is somewhat indicated by their common designation of religionists. Thus we were told they call Catholics, "black shirts," Episcopalians, "white shirts," and Presbyterians, who do not wear gowns, "short shirts." In embracing Christianity marked effects are sometimes observable upon the manners and morals of Indians. On one occasion, when Superintendent Hammond had been having a pow-wow he ventured as a token of peace to offer a squaw a cigar. "No," she said, "I am a Christian." Thinking this a feminine interpretation, he then offered the cigar to a chief man with the same result.

Counting the babies, there were twenty-six Indians in attendance at the mass. The affectionate fondling of one of these by a grandfather as the mass proceeded spoke to us in a wholly understandable language. Once more "a touch of nature made the whole world kin." When the service was over we entered very freely into conversation with the Indians. The official members of the party dealt with the expected outcome of the condemnation proceedings, the unofficial member picked up human and home touches as naturally as he could. Two young men of the number had developed a distinctly humorous turn of mind, and it was interesting to see how their fellow Indians reacted pleasantly to this. We called at the home of one of the elderly women. She is poor and is supported by a widowed daughter who has some skill in basketry. The elderly Indian desired to appeal to Superintendent Hammond for some rationing. This was later the basis of observations on the immorality of rationing. When a government allowance is made and delivered, it is not unusual for the recipient to give a feast and bid neighbors and friends till the supply is exhausted. Such a situation points to the need of properly supervised homes for the aged indigent on the reservations. Our call over, we were taken to the house of John Longfred. He and his wife are Presbyterians and she is perhaps the most wealthy of the Nisqually, having inherited all-totems until her holding exceeded four hundred acres. The home was a very comfortable one. Some rather rare baskets were in evidence. We were shown one for which they said they had paid $25, so all the collectors are not "white men." At last, after a half hour or longer, John observed his wife had something to say. She made an eloquent address which her husband interpreted. In effect she said the prospect of parting with her land had broken her heart, so that she had shed many tears. She saw, however, that the government must have it and she had put their need above her wishes. She appealed to Superintendent Hammond to protect her rights in the case and left the matter with him. There was something instructive in her attitude and in her way of expressing it.

All this had consumed the time from 9.30 to 3.30, and we were probably thirty miles from Tacoma. We naturally turned to Camp Lewis with thoughts of lunch. The hostess house of the Y. W. C. A. served us bountifully and beautifully, and we had most tangible evidence of their capable hospitality. Were the names on the houses omitted, Camp Lewis would pass for Camp Dix. It is actually the largest cantonment in the country, with accommodations for 80,000 men. The same interminable ranges of shed-like barracks stretched away in the distance and forced upon us the grim reality of war. In riding back to Tacoma, our obliging driver made a detour that carried us through the parks. The city is set upon hills. The top of one is crowned by the imposing building of St. Joseph's Hospital. We were cordially received here and shown by the Superior through its wonderfully appointed wards, private suites and operating-rooms. The last word in hospital equipment has been provided. We were permitted to drop words of cheer to the sick as we passed. Finally, in a sun parlor we came upon a convalescing Filipino. Superintendent Hammond had a command of his native tongue, which caused his countenance to glow with happiness.

The next afternoon we were in Seattle, where we rested for twenty-four hours. In the evening we had the privilege of a call from Frances White Rowntree and Helen Masters Wray. Their avidity to hear Philadelphia news was matched by our pleasure in seeing the reaction caused by the far west upon the good things of our Quaker training. They persist as good things in changing environment and circumstances!

The Y. W. C. A. building in Seattle is a landmark amongst many attractive buildings. The Chairman of the Board of Commissioners had occasion to solicit the interest of the general secretary in Indian school girls arriving from Alaska by steamer in Seattle. After a most cordial response of helpfulness, she made the way for us to see the equipment and to understand something of the work of the Association. How we should have rejoiced to have had a thousand influential Philadelphians with us! It was a great lesson in what ought to be in our home city.

(To be continued.)

NEWS ITEMS.

WILLIAM C. BIDDLE TO REPRESENT AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE IN FRANCE.—William C. Biddle, of New York City, a member of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting (Fifth-month and Race Streets), will sail very soon for France, where he will work in association with Charles Evans in managing the affairs of the American Friends' Reconstruction Unit. The number of Friends in France has doubled since last Fall and the present number of two hundred, it is hoped, will be increased to four hundred before next Fall. These added numbers have so increased the executive responsibility of our Paris office that another representative has become necessary to relieve Charles Evans of a portion of his increasing burdens. The Friends' Unit of the Red Cross, the American Friends' Service Committee and the Society of Friends at large are to be congratulated upon securing the services of William C. Biddle for this important work.

CALN QUARTERLY MEETING.—Admirably located in a commanding position, overlooking the beautiful Chester Valley, north of the little village of Caln, is the old meeting-house, named for the district, in which it was built many years ago.

Not a few of us have worshipped there in the quiet of its shaded isolation, and remember with thankfulness the favor of sitting under the ministry of Wm. V. Ditzler and other worthies who have gone from works to rewards.

Contestville is a noisy city, but perhaps no one will question the wisdom of changing the place of holding Caln Quarterly Meeting to a central point easily reached by public conveyance.

The meeting held there in the new house on the 17th inst., was not largely attended, indeed, we were told by more than one person, that of men, there were fewer than at the usual First-day meetings; a small number of visitors were in evidence as well; however, numbers did not interfere with the flow of spiritual life from vessel to vessel.

A reverent stillness settled over the meeting and we may humbly remark that the felt presence of the Master was in our midst.

The silence was broken by prayer, after which encouragement was given for the exercise of faith. This was particularly needed in these trying times.

We were by another minister exhorted to revise the gifts which had been committed to us, whether these were small or large, spiritually, mentally and physically, and we should endeavor to do this in that attitude of heart in which our efforts would redound to the glory of the Lord.

Admission was made in effect, that, with so much that was sad and depressing in the world, there was a natural inclination to allow feelings of discouragement to find a lodgment within us, but that it was important to be of good courage; the following from the Old Testament seemed applicable to present conditions; "Although the fig tree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vines . . . and the fields shall yield no meat . . . and there shall be no herd in the stalls, yet I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation." (Habak 3: 17-18.)

The business meeting was held in joint session throughout, the volume thereof not being great at this season of year.

A substantial lunch in the dining-room, with opportunity to renew old acquaintances as well as to form new ones, is something always to be cherished, and so one more Quarterly Meeting is a memory.

W. B. H.

AFTER-WAR PEACE CONFERENCE.—A conference of the Commissions in regard to the Peace Conference of All Friends after the war was held at the Twelfth Street Meeting-house on Sixth-day, Fifth Month 10th, and after listening to the reports of the Chairmen of the Commissions as to the progress of the work and the information which had been received from Friends in England as to the progress there, we reached the following conclusions:—

1. That the Chairmen of the Commissions are authorized to coopt new members to advise with them in the formation of the conclusions of the Commissions.

2. Members of the Commissions are encouraged to meet with one another and to study the topics, whether able to meet with the whole Commission or not.

3. That all Commissions are to have preliminary reports ready by Twelfth Month 1, 1918, and the members of the Commissions are requested to have their data in the hands of their Chairmen by Tenth Month 1st.

4. That the Executive Committee (made up of the Chairmen of the Commissions) is to decide whether these reports are to be printed before being sent to England.

5. The Chairman was instructed to keep the subject of the Conference before Yearly Meetings, and to encourage Friends everywhere to study the subjects.

6. The Commissions were encouraged to send to the General Chairmen the knottiest problems which occur to them, so that they may be sent out to the others to work over.

English Friends have put a great amount of work and devoted energy into this Conference. They have practically finished most of their Commission Reports, and were reporting ready to go to print so that the Reports of the Commissions could be discussed before the meeting of the Conference. With our more recent experience of war conditions here in America, we have not felt that we could come to conclusions so rapidly and the work of the Commissions is to continue; and we hope our minds will be kept open for more light and experience than we have at the present time.

The feeling of the Conference was that we needed all the love and faith in each other which our great theory of the indwelling spirit could inspire; and that by tolerance and appreciation of the opinions of others who differ from us, an expression of the fundamental, friendly spirit would be found.

A somewhat revised program of the Conference has been sent out by English Friends.

L. HOLLINGSWORTH WOOD.

[NOTE.—It is our intention to follow next week with a further elaboration of the plans of this Commission.—EDS.]

AMERICAN RED CROSS VOLUNTEER FACTORY SERVICE.—Under the auspices of the Southeastern Chapter of The American Red Cross, a volunteer factory for the making of refugee garments has been opened at E315 Market Street, Philadelphia, fourth floor. Power machines and factory methods are employed, as they greatly increase production and result in saving of time and material. Skilled operators will teach and volunteers are wanted. The hours are from 10 to 1 and 2 to 5 o'clock; six days a week. Open Third and Fifth-day evenings, 7 to 9.30.

NOTES FROM JAPAN.—SPIRITUAL GLEANINGS (Picked up by the Business Secretary).—During a big fire which recently destroyed about five hundred houses in Aito, including the post office, State houses, the Girls' School and the business section of the city, Edith Sharpless' kindergarten was having its first graduation ceremony! The fire alarms made such a noise that one of the little tots said, "I'm afraid, afraid," and nearly began to cry. But another child calmly remarked, "Why, God is with us all the time and we needn't be afraid." "Yes, that's what our teacher told us. I'm not afraid." Soon they were all quiet and trusting in their Heavenly Father whose love "casteth out all fear."

Here's a short quotation from the English column of the Hijirizaka Times, a mimeographed sheet gotten out each week by the Christian Endeavor boys at the Tokio meeting. "Last First-day I went to the Union Church in the afternoon. It was the first time that I was there with so many foreigners around me. I appreciated the anthems very highly, and was much moved by the violin playing, but nothing essential was impressed in my mind when I left the church. Ah, I love the narrow, dirty meeting-house of Hijirizaka!"

One of our Monthly Meetings has been troubled by a man, who though very earnest and of a good spirit, insists on using most of the time of the meeting for worship in spite of eldership. At last it was impressed on him that it might be better for him to remain silent sometimes. He took it in a wonderful spirit and made the following comparison: "In my yard there is a well of nice, clear water with a bamboo spout running out to the road so that men pulling their wagons up the hill can stop and drink. When the bamboo is fresh they are very glad to drink of the cool water; but when the spout becomes old and dirty they do not stop to drink. The water is just as good, but the instrument for conveying it spoils its refreshing power. So with my preaching. The 'fountain-head,' the spirit, the saving power is the same; but I fear I am a dirty, broken vessel. The work, coming from my mouth, becomes corrupted." There was no spirit of criticism and he took all the blame. It was a lesson for some of the rest of us.

In the little village of Shishido there lived a dear old Christian lady with her son. The young man had also recently become a Christian, but he was dying of tuberculosis. A short time after his death the mother went to live with the Binfords at Mito. At the first morning worship in the Binford home she offered a beautiful prayer of thanksgiving and agony for her village; part of which might be translated as follows: "O, Father of the light, I think thee that it has been made possible for me to come here to live in the full blaze of this Christian home, where I am one small light in the midst of greater lights. But, O God, what about my little village—Shishido? There all is darkness. Not long ago there were two flickering lights shining in the dark. But now one of them has been taken away to shine up there with thee, and the other one is many miles from Shishido. It is a blessing for me to be here, but that leaves my poor little village without even a flicker of the light. Send the light to Shishido. I am willing to go back at any time and face the opposition and discouragement alone, with thee, if it be thy will. Send the light. Thy will be done. Amen."

Here are some figures recently received from our Province (Iharaki):—The total population of the Province is 1,381,893 people, living in one city (Mito) and 1,247 towns. When you consider that there are but nine missionaries and forty-eight Japanese workers receiving support (men, women and kindergartners), and that but thirty-one of the towns have regular churches and but thirty-four other places beginning work, you see that the vast majority of the section is entirely untouched. Is this not a challenge for us? "Send the light to Iharaki Province."

FRIENDSVILLE ACADEMY CLOSSES ITS SIXTY-FIRST YEAR.—The Commencement Week brought to a close one of the most successful years in the history of the Academy at Friendsville, Tenn. On First-day, Fourth Month 28th, the Annual Sermon was delivered at the Friends' Meeting-house by W. P. Stevenson, of Maryville College. The sermon, filled with advice and teaching, was delivered to a large and appreciative congregation.

The last of the Friend socials was held on the following Fourth-day evening in the basement play-room of Farmum Hall. A large number of students and friends of the Academy were present and enjoyed a very pleasant evening. The "Old Students' Association" of the William Forster Home for Girls served refreshments, the proceeds from which will go as a repair fund for the William Forster Home.

On the next evening, the 2nd, at 8.30 o'clock, in Farmum Hall the Commencement Week came to a close with the graduation exercises. The Class Address was delivered by Thos. Angus, of Knoxville. His theme was "God and Country," and was appreciated by the large audience. The Class Oration, "Forward and Victory," was ably delivered by Iva-dene Ellis, this year's only graduate.

A RECENT wedding that is of peculiar interest just now is one which occurred in Russia last Third Month 9th. The Friends' ceremony was observed at Mogotovo and the civil at Buzuluk. The bride and groom were Lydia C. Lewis of Lansdowne, Pennsylvania, and John Riekman of Dorking, England. As Friends will perhaps remember, these young people are engaged in our relief work in that country.

THE Mac-MILLAN Publishing Company is preparing to issue a child's series of histories on "Great Religious Leaders," and has arranged with Rufus M. Jones to write a volume for the series on George Fox.

TEN thousand khaki Testaments a day, week in and week out, is the record of production of the American Bible Society on its pledge to supply the Young Men's Christian Association gratuitously with service Testaments for American soldiers and sailors. One-half of the books have already been delivered, despite difficulty of obtaining paper, scarcity of labor, and the delays of transportation. The Young Men's Christian Association has no funds for this purpose, and the American Bible Society looks to the Christian people of America for the money to meet the costs of manufacture. This is one of the ways in which the war is making the young men of this generation accessible to the Christian truth. The churches should eagerly respond to the call, for the Society has undertaken to perform this emergency service, nothing doubting that the Christian public would desire to have it done, and would pay the bill.

BRITISH COLUMBIA QUARTERLY MEETING, in session twenty-seventh and twenty-eighth of Fourth Month, met this year for the first time in the city of New Westminster, where up to that date no Friends' meeting had, so far as is known, been held previously. The distance is some eighteen miles from Vancouver, and the Friends from there and the few from the immediate locality of the meeting comprised the larger part of the assembly. Though no visiting Friends were present, contrary to expectations, there was a sense of unity and uplift, while it is thought good has resulted, and will result, from the short addresses at the public meeting on First-day evening, when local members gave short expositions on Friends' views, "Peace," "The Inner Light," "The Sacraments," and "Friends' Mode of Worship."

The date for the next meeting was set for Ninth Month 27th, in Victoria, Vancouver Island. The title of the Quarterly Meeting will then be changed to British Columbia and Alberta Quarterly Meeting, the Monthly Meeting at Calgary, in the latter Province, being now affiliated with the coast meetings.

NOTES FROM JAPAN.—QUESTIONS.—The following questions were recently asked by the fourteen members of the Fourth Year Class in Friends' Girls' School, Tokio, Japan. Most of these Japanese girls had no knowledge of Christianity previous to their entrance into the School four years ago. Since that time they have had almost daily instruction in the Scriptures, and about half of the Class profess to be followers of Christ. The questions were in response to the request of one of their teachers to ask any question that they wished discussed in class. During this year they have been studying Acts and the Epistles.

1. What kind of a being is God?
2. What kind of a being is the Holy Spirit, and when does He come?
3. If one prays, will the Holy Spirit come soon? If He does not come, will not one's faith be weakened? Are there cases of praying with faith, without the Holy Spirit's coming?
4. When we pray does God hear us or does Christ hear us?
5. How can Christ be God's Son?
6. Why is God sometimes called a jealous God, and sometimes not a jealous God?
7. How did Paul know the messages of the Holy Spirit? Were words used?
8. How did the early Christians know that Christ is coming again? Did God tell them? When is He coming?
9. How did the people feel at Pentecost?
10. How could everybody understand the preaching at Pentecost?
11. Why does God not destroy all sin?
12. If we pray for them, will God save children who do not know the true God?
13. Will God lead us if we are patient in trouble?
14. Is church attendance necessary? Cannot one become a Christian without church attendance?

15. Should a Christian in a non-Christian home give thanks before meals?
16. What should be the life of a Christian?
17. What shall one do when one's father, who is not opposed to Christianity, requires daily bowing before an image of Buddha, so that his children may not forget to reverence their ancestors?
18. How may one increase one's faith?
19. Why did God make different Christian sects?
20. Why have the Jews, God's chosen people, suffered so much? Is it because of their sins up to the present time?
21. What are the principles of Friends?
22. How can one lead one's family to believe?
23. Why did Christ speak of living water and eternal life? How can one explain these to those who do not know? If one were asked what eternal life is, what should one answer?
24. How can a Christian help one who is seeking the way of life?
25. How can miracles be?
26. Is capital punishment wrong?

ALICE G. LEWIS.

CLOTHING DEPARTMENT OF FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE.—We have made a very careful study of our records of boxes received since the Clothing Department was organized last Eighth Month. The following list shows the record of the various Yearly Meetings' Sewing Clubs. It should be explained that New York has shipped 3797 garments directly from that city. It becomes increasingly interesting to note the growth of the enthusiasm for this work. Last Ninth Month there were less than 75 sewing clubs. At the present there are over 400 and each week tells of new groups being organized.

Baltimore (both branches), 71 boxes, 3218 articles; California, 26 boxes, 2027 articles; Genesee, 3 boxes, 72 articles; Illinois, 1 box, 40 articles; Indiana (both branches), 97 boxes, 4495 articles; Iowa, 60 boxes, 3913 articles; Nebraska, 37 boxes, 1465 articles; New England, 90 boxes, 5296 articles; New York (both branches), 31 boxes, 530 articles; North Carolina, 18 boxes, 833 articles; Ohio (both branches), 36 boxes, 2356 articles; Oregon, 22 boxes, 1591 articles; Philadelphia (both branches), 473 boxes, 18,962 articles; Western, 229 boxes, 2933 articles; Wilmington, 40 boxes, 2712 articles.

REBECCA CARTER.

NOTICES.

CONCERNING ADDRESS OF MEMBERS OF OUR UNIT.—Persons who have been using the following initials F. W. V. R. C. in addressing members of the Unit should note a postal ruling that the use of such initials must be discontinued.

For all members of the Unit who sailed prior to Third Month 1, 1918, we advise the following address:

Mission de la Société des Amis,
53 Rue de Rivoli,
Paris, France.

Members of the Unit sailing since Third Month 1st are being formed into a second Unit known as Friends' Unit No. 2. To relieve the great congestion of mail at the above address the members of Unit No. 2 should be addressed as follows:

Friends' Unit No. 2,
American Red Cross,
4 Place de la Concorde,
Paris, France.

THE ANNUAL EXCURSION OF THE FRIENDS' HISTORICAL SOCIETY is planned for Seventh-day, Sixth Month 1st. The details will be mailed to members and their friends, but this preliminary notice will enable some to label the date as "reserved."

It is proposed to meet in West Chester at 2:38 on the arrival of the 1:28 train from Philadelphia. The excursion will be by automobiles, first to the historic Birmingham Meeting-house among the Brandywine hills. A brief halt will be made here, long enough to listen to a twenty-minute address, thence following the Brandywine the party will reach Marshaton Meeting-house about 5:30. There will be an address on Humphrey Marshall and an opportunity to explore the Revolutionary home, built by him, which still stands close by the meeting-house. Basket picnic supper in the white oak grove by the meeting-house will be a feature of the occasion.

By authority of a minute granted by Lansdowne Monthly Meeting to Samuel W. Jones, a meeting for Divine worship will be held in the Christian church, Carversville, Bucks County, Pa., First-day, Fifth Month 26, 1918, at 3 p. m.

IMPORTANT ANNUAL MEETING OF ASSOCIATED EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF FRIENDS ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.—The annual Meeting of the Associated Committee of Friends on Indian Affairs will be held at Arch Street Centre (304 Arch Street), Philadelphia, on Third and Fourth-days, Fifth Month 28 and 29, 1918.

The first business session will be held on Third-day, at 2:30 p. m. At 7:30 p. m. of the same day will be held a meeting in the interests of the Indian work to which young Friends are especially invited.

New possibilities are opening before Friends in the Indian work and the meeting this year should be largely attended.

For further information address,

FLORENCE TRUEBLOOD STEERE, Secretary.

HAVERTFORD, Pa.

The Friends' Institute has just received one hundred copies of the Life of Edward L. Scull, and will sell them at 25 cents each, to add to its slender income.

This gift from his sons will renew our memory of that excellent man, whose wise foresight inspired him to become the founder of our Institute, 20 S. Twelfth Street, Phila. The books can also be had at 304 Arch Street.

FRIENDS' LIBRARY, 142 NORTH SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILADELPHIA.—The following books have recently been added to Friends' Library:

Baker—Penn the Statesman and Guilelma.

Creighton—Life of Thomas Hodgkin.

Faris—Old Roads Out of Philadelphia.

Gibbons—Reconstruction of Poland.

Godlee—Lord Lister.

Hill—Rebanking of Europe.

Lippincott—Early Philadelphia.

Maey—From Slavery to Freedom.

Scott and Stowe—Booker T. Washington.

Wakeford—Prisoners' Friends.

LINDA A. MOORE,
Librarian.

MEETINGS FROM FIFTH MONTH 26TH TO SIXTH MONTH 1ST:—

Burlington and Bucks Quarterly Meeting, at Burlington, Third-day,

Fifth Month 28th, at 10:30 A. M.

Gwynedd Monthly Meeting, at Norristown, First-day, Fifth Month 26th, at 10:30 A. M.

Chester, Pa., at Media, Second-day, Fifth Month 27th, at 7:30 P. M.

Concord, at Concordville, Third-day, Fifth Month 28th, at 9:30 A. M.

Woodbury, Third-day, Fifth Month 28th, at 8 P. M.

Abington, at Abington, Fourth-day, Fifth Month 29th, at 10:15 A. M.

Birmingham, at West Chester, Fourth-day, Fifth Month 29th, at 10 A. M.

Salem, Fourth-day, Fifth Month 29th, at 10 A. M.

Philadelphia, at Fourth and Arch Streets, Fifth-day, Fifth Month 30th, at 10:30 A. M.

Goshen, at Malvern, Fifth-day, Fifth Month 30th, at 10 A. M.

Lansdowne, Fifth-day, Fifth Month 30th, at 7:45 P. M.

DIED.—On the ninth of Fourth Month, 1918, at her home near Roxolod, N. C., SOPHOMBA DENNING, wife of Esau Denning, in her seventy-third year; a member and elder of Rich Square Monthly Meeting, N. C.

—, on the fourth of Fifth Month, 1918, at the home of a nephew, J. Garner Parker, GEORGE, N. C., SARAH DEELE, in her eighty-first year; a member of Rich Square Monthly Meeting, N. C.

—, Fifth Month 2, 1918, at her home near Otis, Colorado, MARY ALBERTA MOORE, wife of Joseph W. Moore, and daughter of Milton J. and Louisa Shaw, in her twenty-eighth year; a member of Springville Monthly Meeting, Iowa.

—, on the fourteenth of First Month, 1918, at his home near Plainfield, Ind., JOEL D. CARTER, in his ninety-first year; a life-long member and an Overseer of Sugar Grove Preparative Meeting, Ind.

—, on fourteenth of Fifth Month, 1918, at London, England, EDMUND RUSSELL TIERNEY, son of J. Willour and Lydia Albertson Tierney, aged sixteen years.

WOOLMAN SCHOOL

A Friends' School for Social and Religious Education.

Six Weeks Summer Term:

Seventh Month 1—Eighth Month 10, 1918.

Courses in Hebrew Prophecy, Teaching of Jesus, History of Friends in the Nineteenth Century, Social Service, First-day School Teaching for Children and Adolescents, The Bible in the Schools, and Internationalism.

Send for Circular.

ELBERT RUSSELL, Director,
WOOLMAN SCHOOL,
SWARTHMORE, PA.

Let Me
Help You

W. J. MacWaters

In Selecting Your

RUGS AND CARPETS

Domestic or Oriental

ALL WEAVES

The Home of Bundrah Wilton

"DURABLE AS IRON"

HARDWICK & MAGEE CO.

1220 Market Street

GLASLYN-CHATHAM

PARK PLACE

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

A Family Home of Established Reputation.

Open Throughout the Year.

NATHAN L. JONES.

POCONO MANOR INN

POCONO MANOR, PA.

SPRINGTIME in the Pocono Mountains is ever a delight to those who admire and study nature. The Birds and Flowers are numerous and varied, and the Trout Fishing in the Swiftwater is wonderful.

J. W. HURLEY, Manager
(Pocono Summit Station, D. L. & W. R. R.)

"FRIENDS AND THE INDIANS"

FOR SALE AT $150 BY

FRIENDS' BOOK STORE
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

RESIDENCE: 254 S. 44th St. BELL 'PHONE: BRIDGE 2084X

WILLIAM OAKES

Plumbing and Heating Contractor

ALSO LEAD BURNING

260 SOUTH TENTH STREET

PHILADELPHIA

BELL 'PHONE: FIBERT 3646.

Hajoca Pedestal Lavatory

Equipped with the Hajoca Waste which prevents backing up of residue from previous ablutions.

Visit our Showrooms—within easy reach of City Hall. Hajoca Book, free.

Haines, Jones & Cadbury Co.

1130-1144 Ridge Ave.

(At 12th and Spring Garden)

W. B. WEAVER UNDERTAKER and EMBALMER

550-552 N. 5TH ST., PHILA., PA.

Special Attention Given to Funerals In and Out of the City. Also Chapel Accommodations for Funerals.

BELL 'PHONE: ESTABLISHED 1880

PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT BREAD

To enjoy good health and a sound digestion use PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT BREAD made from the entire wheat grain ground on a stone mill. A perfect food and natural regulator. Sold by all good grocers in Philadelphia.

Write for particulars to

PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT CO.

10th & Susquehanna Ave., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

WALL PAPERS—All Grades

Custom of Friends Specially Selected

FRANK C. BUEHL

Successor to S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON

902 SPRING GARDEN ST. — PHILADELPHIA

Store open until 10.30 A. M. Any other time by appointment only Opposite Spring Garden Station, Phila. & Reading R.

ESTABLISHED 1849. BELL 'PHONE:

FOR RENT—WERNERSVILLE, PA.

BUNGALOW

of 7 rooms, bath, electric lighting, running water, etc Near Galen Hall Hotel. For Seventh and Eighth Months. TATNALL & CO.

P. O. Box 298, WILMINGTON, DEL

Genealogist

Elizabeth B. Satterthwaite
42 E. Race St., Camden, N. J.

WANTED—A COMPANION FOR A MERICAN Friend, in a suburban town.

Address "Z"—"THE FRIEND."

WANTED—AT NORTH HOUSE, 864 N. RANDOLPH ST., PHILADELPHIA, a young woman resident, interested in social work. A pleasant room with board, $3.00 per week.

Apply to CHARLOTTE W. FOSTER, Director.

OUR aim is to make our customers feel that the Holmes Press is their plant. We have room for a few more such proprietors.

THE HOLMES PRESS

J. Linton Enloe, Pres.

1336 Cherry Street, Philadelphia

JOSEPH G. FOGG

FUNERAL DIRECTOR and EMBALMER

S. W. Cor. Sixth and Race Streets

Special attention given to Friends' Funerals

Bell 'Phone: Spruce 1646

SHETLAND PONIES

Oldest Herd in United States

Established 1883

Specialty attractive prices just now owing to change in business arrangements

HARTZELL BROS., - SEBRING, OHIO

Importers and Breeders

CAMP OWAISSA For Girls,

A modest-priced camp on Naomi Lake in the Poconos; central bungalow, with fire place and dining porch; all tents have raised floors, facing lake; swimming, basket-ball, horse-back riding, over-night hikes, etc.; Red Cross work; limited to thirty-five girls; counselors all Friends.

EVALYN M. PAXSON,

No. 241 Bryn Mawr Ave., Phila.

WANTED—IMMEDIATELY—A STENOGRAPHER. Will pay prevailing rate of salary.

AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE,
20 South 12th Street, Phila., Pa.

WANTED—A FRIEND'S FAMILY OF THREE adults would like to take charge of a house in the suburbs, during the summer, while the owners are away.

Address R. S. B.,

Care of "THE FRIEND,"
207 Walnut Place.

WANTED—A POSITION AS COMPANION, CARE of an invalid, or as housekeeper.

Address E. E. STEWART AVENUE, Lansdowne.

WANTED—A TEACHER FOR THE FRIENDS' School at West Chester, Pa., for the next term beginning in Ninth Month, 1918.

Address MARIAN S. PAINTER,
West Chester, Pa.

FOR RENT—EIGHT-ROOM FURNISHED Cottage, bath, open plumbing, hot and cold water, town and spring water. Several meals daily, half hour ferry service to Newport and Narrowsburg Pier. Excellent opportunity where there are one or more invalids in family. Meals must be taken at Maplewood.

Apply DR. W. LINCOLN BATES,
Jamestown, N. J.

A FEW SUMMER BOARDERS CAN BE ACCOMMODATED at our farm; rates reasonable. Apply

SEE R. SHARPLESS,
London Grove,
Chester County, Pa.

Phone J. C. S.,
West Grove 164, R. 5.

A ASSISTANT HOUSEKEEPER—WANTED AT Friends' Academy, a boarding and day school for boys and girls at Forest Valley, Long Island, New York.

Address F. E. WILLIAMS, PRESIDENT,
Glen Cove, N. Y.

Well Built—Easily Used

NONKINK HOSE

LIGHT, smooth and flexible. It does not easily kink or break. It cannot be separated into its original layers because it is made under pressure that forces the rubber layers through the cotton fibre tubes.

It is easily pulled about and a pleasure to use.

Let us supply your needs also in Nozzles, Reels and Sprinklers.

J. E. RHODS & SONS

PHILADELPHIA: 12 N. THIRD ST.
 NEW YORK: 102 BEKMAN ST.
 CHICAGO: 322 W. RANDOLPH ST.
 BALTIMORE AGENCY: 37 S. CHARLES ST.
 FACTORY AND TANNERY, WILMINGTON, DEL.

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE MATERIAL THAT WE SELL

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY
 MANUFACTURERS
 PHILADELPHIA

Philadelphia's
 Representative Store

ELKINS, MORRIS & CO.
 BANKERS

REPRESENTATIVES

JAMES P. MAGILL
 JAMES P. MAGILL

LAND TITLE BUILDING
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.

RAILROAD AND PUBLIC UTILITY BONDS

FOR

CONSERVATIVE INVESTMENT.

FULL PARTICULARS ON REQUEST

SEE WALKER & KEPLER

FOR

Good Electrical Work

531 CHESNUT ST. -:- PHILA.

HARRY S. LEE

313 WALNUT STREET

PAINTER AND GRAINER

ANTIQUE and OFFICE FURNITURE RESTORED
 JOBBING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO ESTIMATES

Letchworth Cottage
 Spring Lake Beach, N. J.

Open for the Season 1918

A. C. & S. H. Letchworth

R. C. Ballinger Ernest R. Yarnall John A. Stratton
 TELEPHONES

Ball—Spruce 17-81 - - Keystone—Race 637

R. C. BALLINGER & CO.

CONTRACTORS and BUILDERS

218 N. Thirteenth St. Philadelphia.

ALFRED C. HAINES

Building Glass and Paints

56 N. Front St., Philadelphia.

WM. H. PILE'S SONS

BOOK AND JOB PRINTING

422 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO THE
 PRINTING OF BOOKS AND CATALOGS

ALBERT C. RIDLEY

1714 SANSOM STREET

Engraving and Printing

FINE BUSINESS STATIONERY

Wedding Invitations, Calling Cards, Greeting
 Cards, Die Stamped Writing Paper

TELEPHONE—LOCUST 1782

New Strength
 In Securities

IN the face of Germany's onslaughts in Europe, the securities market has shown convincing strength.

Our current list of bonds and short-term notes includes issues combining in unusual degree intrinsic value and liberal yield.

Send for PF-160

The National City
 Company

Correspondent Offices in 24 Cities
 Philadelphia—1421 Chestnut St.

Telephone—555 Locust

Bonds Short Term Notes Acceptances

GIRARD TRUST CO.
 BROAD and CHESTNUT STS.

CAPITAL
 AND
 SURPLUS } $10,000,000

Acts as Executor, Trustee, Guardian,
 Administrator, Assignee and Receiver.
 Safes to Rent in Burglar-proof Vaults.
 Interest Allowed on Deposits. :: ::

E. B. MORRIS
 PRESIDENT

Friends Arch St. Centre

304 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Provides comfortable accommodations for guests by the day or week. Meals at moderate prices.

AMELIA D. FEATHERSTONE, Matron.

PHONE—MARKET 1571.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 91.

FIFTH-DAY, FIFTH MONTH 30, 1918.

No. 48.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price $2.00 a year in Advance.

Publisher, DAVIS H. FORSYTHE.

Editors { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
 DAVIS H. FORSYTHE,
 MARY WARD.

Make remittances payable to

THE FRIEND,

No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

We stride the river daily at its spring,
Nor, in our childish thoughtlessness, forese
What myriad vassal streams shall tribute bring,
How like an equal it shall greet the sea.

O small beginnings, ye are great and strong,
Based on a faithful heart and wearless brain!
Ye build the future fair, ye conquer wrong,
Ye earn the crown, and wear it not in vain.

—LOWELL.

PIONEERS FOR A NEW WORLD.

A few hundred years ago the undiscovered continents called forth the energies and daring of adventurous men. The possibilities of discovery fired their imaginations, the spirit of world pioneering stirred within them and led them on to high undertakings. The roivings of the fearless Northmen, the epoch-making voyages of Columbus, the Cabots and Vespucci, Magellan's heroic expedition around the world and the stirring achievements of England's famous sailors are the historic evidence of the response of virile spirits to the opportunities of the unknown. When new worlds were waiting for them they could not rest placidly in the old. The horizon could not contain their vision. The beyond laid claim to their souls.

The age of geographical discovery is gone, but the world cannot do without pioneers. To-day it is not uncharted seas and unexplored continents, but a new and better future for humanity that claims the spirits and energies of men and women everywhere. The future is always calling us to strike out into the unknown. Every man must meet that call in one way or another. To meet it as a pioneer, with the will and the courage to seek and to find, to strive and to achieve, to construct and to produce, belongs particularly to the Christian. His is a religion which meets the blighting effects of evil in the world with the Divine purpose to transform and to create. Amid conditions that crush and cramp life and put Christianity to open shame he looks out into the future with the confident faith that by the power of the Love revealed by his Master these things can be changed. "If a majority in every civilized country so desired, we could, within twenty years, abolish all abject poverty, quite half the illness in the world, the whole economic slavery which binds down nine-tenths of our population; we could fill the world with beauty and joy, and secure the reign of universal peace. It is only because men are apathetic that this is not achieved, only because imagination is sluggish, and what always has been is regarded as what always must be. With good-will, generosity, intelligence, these things could be brought about." Those who seek to apply Christianity to life, to make it vital and creative, will endeavor to rid themselves and others of all apathy, all sluggishness of imagination, and will set themselves with earnestness to accomplish their share in the task of building upon true spiritual foundations the new world that lies beyond the war.

To do this involves the effort to avoid a life that cautiously restricts or guards itself for fear of injury or pollution. It means a life that seeks to escape from the cage of its own self-interest and to extend itself freely and generously to its fellows. It implies living expansively on the frontiers of fellowship. If this is a guiding purpose of our lives, we shall seek to increase our capacities for friendship. We shall not voluntarily limit ourselves to a little group of congenial intimates, but shall welcome opportunities for association with others. There are many things which the world needs, but it most needs more friendship, more love. The greatest power for creating these is a life that incarnates them and sets them into operation between itself and others. Seeing the social conditions of to-day we shall particularly be glad to increase our associations and our friendships with those who are called the common people. If democracy and Christianity are true, these are they with whom rest the future and the welfare of humanity. Their attitude toward Christianity will be the main human factor in determining the time when it shall become the basis of social relationship. The fact that many of them have become estranged from organized religion while their hearts remain responsive to the simple and genuine exhibition of the friendly life may well make us desire to increase our sympathetic contacts with them.

To live so as to play one's part in making the world a better, a more Christian place to live in means also a sincere effort to widen our understanding and our sympathies. Our capacity for actual personal acquaintance with our fellow workers is necessarily limited in many ways. Knowledge and thought, however, are much less circumscribed by the conditions of time and place. We should push out the boundaries of our mental life. The mind of the world is at work. The war and the great changes it has brought have stimulated men more than ever to think new thoughts and enter upon new undertakings. Social and political parties, industrial groups and movements of many sorts with differing principles and purposes exist on every side. To know and understand the ideas, the desires and the needs of the people who compose these groups is part of the task of the Christian pioneer. A man can do little without knowledge and comprehension of others. These others, however different, from himself are part of his world, which he is seeking to serve and to transform. The value of his service will be seriously impaired if he fails to comprehend the meaning of the social groups about him. He who feels the impulse to help the world advance toward the realization of Christian ideals will accordingly be eager to understand the needs, the aspirations, the struggles and the hopes of men. He will wish to know more of the conditions which lie back of their lives and which hamper the development of so many of his brothers. He will inquire how it is that our prevailing system condemns so large a number to poverty, drudgery and dreariness and makes for them a hollow mockery of the idea that this is a land of equal opportunity for all. Our social life is marred, too, by its spiritual poverty. Strife and antagonism divide men into hostile groups and prevent the growth of the love and friendship which are the real satisfactions of existence. Such things must be understood if we are to grow out of them into a healthier and happier way of life.

266 PAGES COVERED

If we are earnest in our efforts to increase friendship and understanding among men we shall not allow ourselves to be deterred or checked by the names of things which may have been the marks of hostile criticism. Our minds will not suddenly close when such terms as Labor Union, Socialism, I. W. W. or Bolsheviki knock at the door. Nor shall we rest satisfied with the vague and superficial notions which the uninformed attach to such words. We shall remember that back of them are men and women of flesh and spirit like ourselves, that there has never been a monopoly of truth, and that any movement which unites any considerable group of sincere persons is sure to have within it some soundness and right.

Christians and Friends in particular have a religious history which should make them eager to understand others. Not malevolence or depravity, but blindness and failure to understand has been the error underlying the continued attempts of men to crush new forms of truth. It was failure to understand which threw George Fox into prison as a blasphemer and led the inhabitants of Coggeshall to proclaim a fast "to pray against the errors of the peoples called Quakers." Blindness was responsible for the execution in Massachusetts of William Robinson, Marmaduke Stephenson and Mary Dyer under the act which banished upon penalty of death "a pernicious sect commonly called Quakers." It was blindness which made Paul a participant in the death of Stephen. It has been largely blindness, ignorance, the unwillingness or the inability to understand that has from age to age made men hostile to new growths of truth, has set them in opposition to the changes involved in its creative processes and has furnished the grounds for their attempts to stamp it out by persecution.

We of to-day who have had opportunity to learn the lessons of history and especially those of us whose ancestors endured persecution for the truth which is now our heritage are summoned both by the past and the future to positive efforts toward understanding. We may feel that we are not likely to persecute. But if we really desire to develop Christian love and fellowship among men, we shall not be satisfied with this, nor even with a tolerance that merely holds aloof from the things which seem to contravene our traditional ideas and customs. We shall welcome progressive thought and action that tend toward a better social life, though they may threaten our cherished possessions. We shall joyfully go in search of new truth that may help to transform the present bitterness and darkness of the world into sweetness and light.

E. W. E.

C. VIRGINIA SELLEW.

[We print herewith a tribute to our late beloved Friend, written by one of her younger friends. It voices what is in the mind of many in regard to C. Virginia Sewell, and emphasizes the note so prominent in the expression at her funeral, that the joy of the Lord was her strength.

Like her husband, a former Editor of THE FRIEND, C. Virginia Sewell came into the Society of Friends in her adult life. She had behind her a rich store of the best Methodist traditions, and her contribution to the Society of her adoption was largely along the line of rich emotional feeling. Our long training in the restraint of feeling made this the more valuable to us, and the wide recognition of our Friend's gifts bore ample testimony to our need of her service. Her quarter of a century of faithful ministry brought her very near to the heart of our membership, and many not of our fold join us in the feeling that they have parted with "a mother beloved." —Eds.]

TRIBUTE TO C. VIRGINIA SELLEW.

In the entering into Eternal Life the past week of our dearly loved Friend, Virginia Sewell, we have lost and Philadelphia Yearly Meeting has lost, a valuable friend and member; one of the dear old-time Friends whom we can so ill afford to lose.

But our loss is her eternal gain, and we can only feel, with her family, that her sufferings are over and that all is well.

She was eager to join her husband and children who had preceded her to the unknown country; and the dear old father and mother whom she nursed so tenderly up to the time of their passing.

In our little meeting at Lansdowne, she worshipped with us for the few short years she lived here, and well do we remember her loving counsel and earnest prayers which have helped us, not only then, but for all time.

I remember when she had been to Rhode Island to attend my mother's funeral; we were returning to Philadelphia together, and noticing my sad face, she comforted me in her own sweet, motherly way, and when we parted she took my hand and said, "Now when thee gets back to thy family, do not let them feel thy sorrow, even if thy heart does ache, do not let it depress them." Many a time since then have I remembered this advice, and many times has it helped me, because I had to keep up for the sake of others.

She was affectionate, kindly and rich in hospitality; well do I recall her beaming face as she sat at dinner in her home on Sixth Street with ten or twelve friends around her. Primarily she was a devoted wife and mother, uniring in what she considered to be her duty toward others, she always had a word of cheer for those who were ill or in distress, and never missed an opportunity to lend a helping hand. From her life we may learn many lessons, not the least of which was the habit of happiness. A smile of welcome, a clasp of her hand and one went on one's way with a feeling of cheer and joyousness.

"Down thro' the valley of silence,
The voiceless valley of Death—
Into a calm still country
When comes no mortal breath.
Beyond all toil and weeping,
Beyond earth's darksome night
Beyond the mist and shadows,
Into the glorious light."

LANSDOWNE, PA.

ALICE F. PENNOCK.

"LOVEST THOU ME?"

"Lovest thou me?"—a gentle voice was speaking

With meaning clear that reached the listener's heart—

"E'en more than these, thy hopes and fond ambitions?"

Wouldst thou from them forevermore depart

If for my sake?" That thrice-repeated question

Re-echoed on the shores of Galilee,

And thrilled the inmost soul of one disciple!—

"Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me?"

"Lovest thou me?" "Yea, Lord, thou truly knowest!"

The answer came as deep to deep replies,

As heart of man to heart of God can answer

When purpose true within the bosom lies,

Concealed though 'tis 'neath passion's smouldering ashes

Of late defeat and shame and misery.

The answer came with none the less assurance:

"Yea, Lord, thou knowest how great my love for thee."

"Lovest thou me?" That age-old question

Falls with directness on our hearts to-day,

"E'en more than these?" "What meaneth thou, O Master?"

And tremblingly we bow ourselves to pray,

"E'en more than these?"—our dull minds grasp His meaning

As one by one our cherished hopes we see

Arise before us. Still the words keep ringing,

In tender, pleading accents, "Lovest thou me?"

"Lovest thou me?" No eloquence he asketh

From feeble lips of clay to make reply;

The language of the heart alone assureth

An answer that will fully satisfy.

"He loveth much to whom much is forgiven."

Oh, may our answer glad, spontaneous be,

Like Simon's was of old, "Yea, Lord, thou knowest

How fervent and sincere our love for thee!"

—ELSIE E. EGERMEIER.

LETTERS FROM FRANCE.

PARIS, Fourth Month 6, 1918.

MY DEAR FATHER:—

I have not written for the last two weeks for I have been working too hard, getting the refugees who fled before the German advance fed, and have been too tired at night to think of writing, but I came up to Paris on Fourth-day last to attend an executive committee meeting and have a free day to-day and probably to-morrow and will try to give an account of myself. I shall start in at the Red Cross Office on Second-day working with Charles Evans, and will get letters probably more promptly hereafter, as I shall be here permanently in all likelihood.

It was about the 10th or 20th that the drum-fire of the barrage started, and it was much more severe and long-continued than anything that we had heard, but I didn't attach much importance to it. We all kept on at our regular work, except some of the men who paid visits to a nearby aviation camp to keep in touch with the news. Being out of touch with the world we didn't know very well what was going on and were fed on rumors by passing despatch-riders and other Tommies who happened to drop in on us for food or rest. But we began to realize that something big was going on. On Sixth-day afternoon, Bay Murray called my attention to a blazing avion, which fell not many miles away from us, and turned out to be Boche, according to the testimony of two Tommies who turned up for supper. By that time we knew that things were pretty bad on our immediate front and that the équipes which lay between us and the lines must have been driven out. We were wondering when they would turn up at our station—when we found they were not there by supper-time, I began to feel that things were exaggerated and that we could safely stay.

Things were not so right as that after all;—however, I told everybody to pack up and be ready to leave in the morning if the news was worse, for we now had heard that the Germans were advancing rapidly and that there was nothing between us and them, except a disorganized army which had ceased to offer any resistance.

But just about bed-time the other équipes began to arrive, and Maxwell Wray spent a busy night cooking for them as they came in. They unpacked their beds and we stowed them away in our attic and began a series of midnight conferences, as a result of which we determined to set off at 7 A. M. I told every one to pack before going to bed and did so myself. Then K. Cross came in and suggested that if we could get the agricultural équipe to start their carts now, it would be better, for they went very slowly and they ought to be on their way before the foot-passengers. So he and I went down to their camp and held another discussion with them in bed in the dark. They promised to start at 7 A. M.

Then we went back to bed—I didn't get undressed, but lay there dozing and thinking. At last I heard Dick Clements come in and so got up to get the last news from him. He had started off all the équipes, then had gone over to see the Sous-Prefet; and he brought definite advice to us to clear out. He had gone to bed at the Sous-Prefet's and been routed out of bed by the order to evacuate at about twelve o'clock. He was well lagged out and we put him to bed with orders to call him at 5 A. M.

The agricultural équipe on the receipt of this report sent two of their men out to bring in their tractor,—we having learned that the other tractor from nearer the lines had been abandoned owing to the congestion of the roads.

There wasn't much to do but to go to bed, so I set the alarm for 4.30 and turned in again, having packed everything but my bed. Our breakfast orderlies were in the other house, a quarter of a mile away, and Smith had volunteered to get an early breakfast for us. We were now about thirty people—with seventeen horses, a colt and three carts.

We turned out early, and breakfast was ready early, embellished with luxuries such as jam and the remainder of Anne Scattergood's fruit cake, for there was no longer reason to save provisions and we walked into jam and butter at a great rate. Chawner had been up all night trying to make our motorcycle go, but he didn't succeed, and in the end we left it behind. Some of the other boys had made a couple of boxes for our tools, and these were duly packed.

I chased up to No. 1, where Tom Cope, Carleton MacDowell and Parvin Russell were sleeping and entertaining British officers, and told them to pack everything at once and we would get breakfast. I found the road entirely blocked by British camions, so that we could not get our carts up there, so I trundled up a wheelbarrow on another trip just as it began to dawn, to help them bring their baggage down to the carts. At last everybody got packed and we loaded our things on the carts, including our most valuable kitchen utensils, and sent them off together with the first bunch of our men.

Then Ernest Brown turned up with the Garner truck loaded with stores from H———. This was too good a chance to be lost, so we unloaded the truck and Kenneth Cross undertook to extend an invitation to all the inhabitants to ride to R——— where they could get trains. Very few of them accepted at first and he only got one load together. Everything then seemed to me to be in good shape, and no further use in waiting, so putting bread, butter and cheese in my pocket, Carleton MacDowell and Hayes and I set off to walk to Montdidier—as we feared the train at R——— would be too crowded and we expected to get to Paris that night. A British captain, meanwhile, dropped in on us and after being given some coffee was much revived. He gave some very hopeful views and proposed setting up his headquarters in our house, whereupon I asked him to look out for our kitchen range, which he promised to send on to us when he got a chance. He left before evening.

During our walk, K. Cross and Ernest Brown worked like Trojans and evacuated the whole village, getting everyone, except two who wished to stay, away to the railroad. Of course, many set off in their own carts, among whom was Mme. Varlot, whose cart George Downing helped to load.

Our walk to M—— was like a picnic for us, although it was very sad to see the road filled with refugees. We could help some of them and did so, and many of our crowd, particularly Tom Cope, worked very hard pushing wheelbarrows and all sorts of conveyances for many of the émigrés. There was a continual stream, carts loaded with beds and furniture, with the old and young perched on top and the rest of the family trooping around, three or four women pulling a homemade cart or wheelbarrow; a woman leading a goat or cow or perhaps both; people on bicycles with all they had saved in a string shopping bag, and baby carriages loaded with food and babies.

It was fortunately a clear day, but unfortunately a hot one, and the poor cows suffered tremendously and would lie down unable to go further. We passed one bunch of about twelve tractors being driven to safety and making such a dust and noise as never was. The three of us sat down in the shade by the roadside and had a splendid meal of cheese, bread, butter, chocolate, dates, nuts and apples, then pushed on for M——. In passing through R—— we had stopped to offer our services to the Secours d'Urgence, but were told that they had given up and were going off themselves so that we didn't stop there at all.

When Dick Clements turned up, we sent most of the boys on to Paris by the afternoon train, but some five or six stayed to see what we could do for the évacués who were pouring into town from all the country to the north and east. I found a niche in a kitchen the Smith College girls had started in a school-house, and built fires and cut bread for supper until seven o'clock. By that time Cross had come in with the story that German cavalry had been reported within three miles of G—— by a British courier, whereupon all the troops had dropped everything and run. The report of the Germans was not true but the rest was, for he saw it. He was so tired with loading refugees onto the truck and pedaling a flat-tired bike away from the Boches that I gave him my bed, and went off to the camp of the agricultural équipes beyond town and slept there on my coat in the open.

Our separation from the townspeople was very sad. Mme. Debailly could hardly bear the thought of losing the things bought with Arndt's collection, but when I promised to try to do something for her after the war she fairly wept and told me that already I had done too much for her. M. Graux, our old carpenter, stayed behind with his tools—I don't know what has become of him, but he is now well behind the German lines.

I wish I could describe the line of march from Rove to Montdidier; each family, in typical French fashion, was frankly individualistic. There were coops of fowls slung under carts, pigs being carried in carts loaded with bedding. The saving of bed clothes and bedding was perhaps the most general feature of the long cavalcade,—and always old decrepit people nestled among the heap of bed clothes with the youngest of the family near them. How those who did not have carts managed to push the baby-carriages, carry the bundles and herd their large families over the long, dusty kilometres I don't know. They kept coming into M. all night.

All night long as I lay by the side of the road I could have heard and seen, had I been awake, the strings of camions almost touching each other, carrying the French troops to the front. It must have resembled the famous ravitaillement of Verdun, where the camions passed one every six seconds. I was up early and made a good breakfast at the hotel and then went to the Hotel de Ville, where I helped unload the bread the Maire had ordered for the refugees, and then I reported to the school, where I worked with the Smith College girls all day, keeping their fires going and lifting the lessiveuses of soup and coffee around, cutting bread and opening condensed milk.

I don't remember when we began to feed the trains at the station, but it must have been First-day. We sent down the big cans (lessiveuses), bigger than slop cans, of soup, chocolate and café au lait in an auto with pitchers and cups, together with bread, and passed with these from car to car, filling cups and handing them in together with bread, to train after train, with five hundred people each. J. H. H.

(To be continued.)

THERE were among the prisoners two very bad men, who often sat drinking with the officers and soldiers, and because I would not sit and drink with them, it made them the worse against me. One time, when these two prisoners were drunk one of them (whose name was William Wilkinson, who had been a captain), came in and challenged me to fight with him. I, seeing what condition he was in, got out of his way; and next morning, when he was more sober, showed him how unmanly a thing it was in him to challenge a man to fight, whose principle he knew it was not to strike; but if he was stricken on one ear to turn the other. I told him that if he had a mind to fight, he should have challenged some of the soldiers, that could have answered him in his own way. But, however, seeing he had challenged me, I was now come to answer him, with my hands in my pockets, and, reaching my head towards him, "Here," said I, "here is my hair, here are my cheeks, here is my back." With that, he skipped away from me and went into another room, at which the soldiers fell a-laughing; and one of the officers said, "You are a happy man that can bear such things." Thus he was conquered without a blow.—George Fox's Journal, quoted by L. Violet Hodgkin, in "A Book of Quaker Saints."

A SCHOOL OF INTERNATIONALISM.

The groups that gathered at Twelfth Street Meeting-house, Philadelphia, from Fifth Month 6th to 10th, 1918, were favored with a variety of subjects from various states and conditions. We can only review them in a fragmentary way.

E. E. Bach told of the Ellsworth Collieries, near Pittsburgh, Pa., where household arts are taught the girls, manual arts the boys, mining-law the men, in their social settlement. The way to win them away from liquor is to provide them with better entertainment than the saloons. As an illustration, a child horrified its father by playing with a razor, when the dangerous weapon was dropped at the sight of an orange held out by the parent.

The Dairy for this community is a loss financially, but in health-saving it works wonders—the death rate among infants has decreased from thirty-six to six. Church membership is encouraged, and the school teachers are required to visit daily among the families, the foreign mothers anxious to learn. We are urged to aid in four ways in our own neighborhood:—

1. To Americanize one emigrant woman.
2. To induce one foreign woman to be a citizen.
3. To teach one of these to speak English.
4. To put one emigrant family on calling list.

Teaching Peace to children in an unexpected Bible Class was presented by Alfred C. Garrett.

In Isaiah and Jeremiah we find a sublime spirit of Internationalism, the truest patriots of their age, who counselled repentance in order that Jehovah might hear Israel's cry. Assyria was His instrument for their punishment, and it would also suffer later. The story of the Prophet being in a dungeon, and drawn out of it by a Negro (Jer. xxxviii) appeals to children. Commercialism and materialism are our national sins.

Lucia Ames Meade, of Boston, spoke of Modern Fallacies; especially should we shun the Prussian idea that all government rests on force. A town in Maine with seven thousand inhabitants is so well regulated that only two policemen are needed.

Agriculture, mining, banking, the press, the railroads are a preliminary to force in a true Democracy. Civilization has produced armies; to call atrocities "brutal" is unfair to animals—they do not go out in bands to attack their own species, neither did primitive man fight en masse. The Sermon on the Mount is scientific, but Germany has perverted this. One hundred and seventy conscientious objectors are now in insane asylums owing to their hardships, and thirty-one have been shot in Berlin. "The Winning of the War" by Usher is a book worth reading. Also "Approaches to the Great Settlement," by Emily Balch.

One evening was devoted to the interests of trades unions that we might enter into their problems and help to solve them intelligently and moderately.

Leonora O'Reilly from New York was a gaunt Irish maiden, eloquent and impassioned; crossing her hands on her throat as she pleaded for her sisters in factories where shirt-waists are cut and made in fourteen minutes by thirteen girls. The same number are required in making a collar.

"We want to do our work well," she said, "but it is this deadly routine that saps the vitality; every child needs a chance to be normal, not a wreck from exhaustion and this drives men and women to liquor; an injury to one affects all. If in our industries, we push the people to extremity, we prevent the world being a fit place to live in. Our Democracy is founded on Education; the Labor Movement strives for co-operation in betterment. Cadbury Cocoa Works in England are an instance of brotherly kindness, greatly appreciated by employees; the pretty village and park where they are housed—also the attitude of this Friend's establishment when they declined to furnish cocoa to Government for soldiers in the South African War." "We work for Peace only," said they.

A Jewish tailor spoke of their union having been successful in a forty-eight hour law per week for work, instead of ninety hours as formerly. Equal pay for equal work of women was also favored. A wonderful arbitration occurred this Spring in Chicago when the eight-hour law was passed for meat packers—forty thousand Polish laborers assembled in the park and cried for joy when they heard this.

President Wilson is willing to hear the Captains of Labor, "men in the rough," but the multi-millionaires decline to listen. We are traitors to our country when we allow the submergence of the poor.

The English poet, Wm. Watson, wisely says, "Labor, the giant, chafes in his hold." It is this unrest that disturbs comfortable business relations.

We listened the following evening to the employers' side of the question.

Arthur Jackson mentioned his desire to be a conscious factor in Progress—the inevitable tragedy of a world war has aroused us. The rights of control should be divided. Life is for living, not merely making a living.

Bernard Waring recommended a good book by Rauschenbusch, "Christianizing Social Order," in which Jesus' attitude in the synagogue showed his sympathy with the captives, the blind, the bound, proclaiming liberty for them. Our Society of Friends suffers from exclusiveness; we should draw trades' unions members to unite with us, and give evidence of real brotherhood.

Morris E. Leeds followed with the thought of wise leadership being necessary, the constructive type, not the fighting type, and how in some establishments these are chosen among the workmen to moderate and educate their outlook.

He visited in 1913 a great optical instrument factory in Germany, where unselfish enterprise led the masters to divide the profits among their six thousand employees, and also to donate largely to the University of Jena, near them.

The Dennison Paper Company is another excellent example of co-operation in Massachusetts, where four generations have held the love of their workmen, sharing dividends and stock with them.

The subject for the succeeding date was "The Friends of German Democracy," by Herbert Welsh. He and Rudolph Blankenburg with many more loyal Americans, wished to persuade the people of Germany to throw off the Prussian yoke and to confine the Kaiser and his partners in an insane asylum. A great petition in this direction is being formulated, and the organization will meet on Fifth Month 15th, at the Y. M. C. A. building.

Finally, the condition of Philadelphia was presented on Sixth-day evening by the Women's League for Good Government; Anna B. Day telling of their effort made recently to get non-voters to register in order that they may go to the Primaries. This opportunity for the betterment of Pennsylvania was never more needed, for we are ashamed of its record as the blackest State in the Union. "Make the map all white," is surely the desire of us all.

H. P. MORRIS.

"With calm, brave purpose everyday renew,
And let each moment planned and precious be,
And thou shalt find thou has just time to do
What God requires of thee.

"What God requires, Who knoweth well thy frame,
Not what thy friends or those around may ask:
The ceaseless bustle, or overstrain
Or self-imposed task.

"Be not of careless or of anxious mind,
But let His gracious peace thy spirit fill
With quiet diligence to seek and find Just time to do His will."

CHILDREN'S CORNER.

A HAPPY CLIMAX.—I have heard it said, even by Audubonites, that we have far more important things than birds to think of just now. Never, perhaps, has bird protection been so vital and necessary a measure as it is at the present time. There are many ways of helping in the struggle for right and world-wide peace, and the farmer can do as much in the great cause as can the soldier, for one of the most crying needs of the whole world at the present time is food. Now to obtain good crops we need our friends, the birds, and every one who wantonly destroys these useful allies is a traitor to his country.

I know that by protecting birds in general, I shall be working for the salvation of thousands of innocent children, now starving in the world. Our thoughts can not dwell unceasingly on these sorrows caused by war. Our minds would give way under pressure and bodily health collapse, and we become a burden to others instead of helpers, in the world's efforts. What better, purer joy and relief can we find than those given to us by God and nature? The study and companionship of birds are useful to us, their songs cheer and soothe, their beauty satisfies, their winning ways charm us. Therefore, the work of the Audubon Society need not be looked upon even as a side issue, but as a vitally useful partner in the nation's struggle.

I settled upon a charming spot called Glen Ranch in the San Bernardino Mountains, California. Glen Ranch is situated in a sort of basin, with mountains all around it, and through it runs the most beautiful creek that I have yet seen in this part of California. The stream is not very deep, but it makes up for this in beauty and rapidity—as it skips over the boulders, and makes tiny waterfalls every few yards—singing its loud happy song as it leaps along. On either side of it are beautiful trees, their tall straight trunks gleaming white in the dazzling sunshine which filters through the foliage and casts chequered shadows all around. The ground below is strewn with dead leaves, beautiful even in decay, showing the delicate tracery of their veins. The many-hued butterflies and the dragon flies are skimming over the water. I was rather too late to see many flowers, but the wild clematis was in bloom in profusion everywhere and well deserves the name of "Traveler's Joy."

One morning I followed a road parallel to the creek—and its distant roar was refreshing on a hot day. Part of my path was shaded by great sycamores, meeting overhead. On my way I had a treat in a private interview with a number of black and white warblers. They sang little snatches of song—in-tterspersed with bird conversation that almost amounted to heated arguments. They looked down from the tree-tops at me, calling as if to ask my opinion on important matters.

I wandered on again, and to my left, at the foot of the purple mountains was a field of waving gold and crimson. A narrow tree trunk crossed the stream, and over this bridge I did not hesitate to go. I found the sea of blossoms were golden-rod, softly waving in the breeze—and the intensely red flowers were lobelia. Over this brilliant field hovered gorgeous butterflies—the Monarch, Swallow-tails, the Dog-faces, and many other kinds; while darting from flower to flower, seeking the nectar, while beating their quivering wings, were numbers of humming-birds. One of the finest, the Calliope, was very friendly, and sat on a little branch close by and allowed me to study it at leisure. I had only my opera glasses with which to watch the little creature. At one side of the field were water-willows and in the willows warblers of many kinds were singing, and any number of gold-finches. In every locality there is some bird who seems to reign over the place. Here it was the gold-finches—in flocks everywhere, singing their sweet, rippling song. But my great joy was yet to come, the climax of my happy holiday. I have lived twelve years in California and wandered beside creeks and waterfalls, but I had never seen the water-ouzel. At Glen Ranch I had spent mornings by the creek looking for "the dipper," and my time was nearly up. Some one said, "Yes, we have seen the little brown bird at 'Happy Jack's Ranch,' running up and down in the water." Yet when there I had not been able to find the ouzel. One day in the afternoon, I went out for a final search. Crossing one of the rustic bridges, my heart gave a leap. There, perched on one leg, on a boulder, just emerging from the stream, was my little brown bird—all puffed out, and apparently half asleep. At last, after so many years, I had found him. I dared not stir for fear I would scare him away. He did not appear frightened, but almost seemed to wink and say, "You wait a bit, and I will show you what I can do." After while he began to sing—such beautiful, rich notes, so clear and loud as to be heard above the roar of the water. I listened in rapture. Then he began to bend as a thing on springs. With a leap up and then down, the water-ouzel, like a diver, went head first into the stream, and gave me for twenty minutes the most wonderful exhibition of his diving. He seemed to choose the places where the creek was wildest and foamed most—as it fell from high boulders. Once he was actually carried away down stream—for a few yards, but emerged triumphant.

Suddenly the "dipper" disappeared! How changed everything was by his absence! I was turning to go home when a gleam of red and brown flashed by me—going down stream. Soon I had the pleasure of hearing his exhilarating song and watching his playful antics again.

The next day I found him once more—and had a delightful afternoon, following him up and down the creek. Sometimes he seemed to sing while under the water, and again on a rock. Turning suddenly, I saw sitting on two boulders, all puffed out, two other water-ouzels. They were the ones that had been singing short snatches of tender notes to one another. They also took their turn in diving and running under the water, all finally taking wing and flying away into the forest depths.—Printed at suggestion of K. E. R.

AN OREGON TRAIL.

(Continued from page 644.)

We pursued the course of Puget Sound northward as we left Seattle by train for Everett. Here we were met by Dr. Buchanan, the genial Superintendent of the Tulalip School and by William Skelton, his Indian commodore. William's command was a fifty-foot government launch, and he had occasion to show his competency in a two-hours' battle with a violent head wind and an angry sea. We were in no danger so long as we clung securely to the framework of the upper deck, but our good host lost his broad-brim hat! Tulalip Bay was a quiet haven of beauty as we tied up to the dock in the fading sunlight. The buildings of the School spread out before us on the green campus, sloping down to the water, and we involuntarily exclaimed, "What an ideal spot for an Indian School!"

Dr. Buchanan represents a remarkable combination of qualifications for valuable service to the Indian. To begin with, he is an M. D., and has established a fine little hospital of a dozen beds. The physician in charge had been called to war service and in addition to school superintendence and the responsibilities of four reservations, Dr. Buchanan was at the hospital each morning to treat the twenty or more patients requiring daily care. It is evidently his plan to guard the children in the incipient stages of the diseases to which they are particularly subject, by minor operations or by methods of antiseptics. Thus the wash-rooms are all provided with a gargle for morning and evening, and the general sanitation of air and sunlight and the liberal use of hot water are insisted upon. All this is designed not only for the immediate good of the School, but for its reflex action in future homes. In the hospital young women are in training as nurses and graduates are in practice amongst their people. But the Doctor is an up-to-date educator as well. Perhaps the most interesting place in his School is the Montessori room. Dr. Montessori would have something to learn there herself in the adaptation of her ideas and in the development of new material. The Doctor gave the credit for this to an unusual teacher, but he had all the theory behind the practice at his fingers' ends. In each of the several rooms as we moved about, we saw some notable work. The Indian children appeared particularly skilful in phonics and their reading showed the effect of this. Some quick work in arithmetic dispelled the idea that Indians are slow in handling figures. Dr. Buchanan is also a musician of some gift and has put life and interest in the school singing. He knows the cohesive value of this exercise and his assembly seemed able to respond as a group better than is usual in Indian schools. Finally, the Doctor is a linguist and ethnologist. He uses two Indian tongues freely and has no little comparative philological knowledge. This is not an unimportant key to the Indian character. As to ethnology, the practical attempts to use it at Tulalip have led to some misunderstanding. An effort to fathom this misunderstanding was our concluding chapter of Indian experience.

The totem pole and the potlach have had a revival at Tulalip. William Skelton has been an active agent in making both of them correct as pagentry to express chapters of past Indian history in a way that will preserve a memory of the good and show by contrast with twentieth century civilization how degrading the evil in Indian custom and life was. A great totem pole, made by Skelton, has been set up at the School and he is engaged now in making a "story pole." In brief, this story pole illustrates in boldly carved characters the method of training Indian children by folk-lore to courage and industry and other necessary qualities of good morals. We were particularly interested in the means used to teach Indian boys "not to say more than they know." This folk-lore had its basis in very perverted and dangerous ideas of deity. It was a part of a system that good Indians themselves would wish to have superseded. Similarly the potlach as a community house enabled Indian families to perpetuate their special family traditions and manner of life by industries, rites and dances. Dr. Buchanan has established an annual fair for the reservations over which he exercises supervision, and the form of the potlach is preserved in a large building used during the fair for what we might name an exhibition hall. This is recited by way of introduction.

Without forgetting that there are some fundamental ideas of real religion in the crude expressions of Indian life, it is probably no exaggeration to say that their religion (we call it paganism) in its superstitious frenzies was dangerous as well as degrading to them and to any society of which they might form a part. This religion expressed itself mostly through dances. It is not surprising, therefore, that the government should prohibit the dances. This prohibition was preceded by the establishment of schools and hospitals. Folk-lore must give place to academic and industrial training and the medicine man to the regular practitioner and nurse. The quack doctor and patent medicine are too much in evidence in our boasted civilization for us to forget that these superstitions die hard. It is difficult to kill them by prohibition. The Indian is not lacking in resources, and it is not surprising that under the cloak of a new religion he should make an effort to perpetuate all those superstitions that put power in the hands of the practitioner. This new religion is known as Shakerism [in no way connected with eastern Shakerism], and was developed by one John Slocum. Apparently it is a covered attempt to perpetuate the "temanamus" of the medicine man in a weird mixture of the Indian, Catholic and Protestant religion. The whole matter is admirably treated by Dr. Buchanan in a report to the Indian Department in 1914. It has not been easy to suppress Shakerism without an appearance of religious persecution. Perhaps the encouragement of this fact has stimulated the Lumini, one of the tribes under Dr. Buchanan's superintendency, to revive one of their temanamus dances. Lumini is near the city of Bellingham, about seventy-five miles from Tulalip. The interest of some of the prominent people of the town had been secured by the Indians, and on the basis of the need for "harmless diversion" for the ignorant during long Winter evenings, an effort to sanction this dance has been instituted.

A Ford automobile, a capable driver, and Dr. Buchanan's intelligent company made a seventy-five mile motor drive a succession of interests not reproducible on paper. We first skirted the Tulalip Reservation. Some of the bordering swamps had furnished large quantities of spagnum moss, which the boys of the School had gathered and forwarded to Washington for army surgery. The wealth of the Tulalips is in lumber. Only seven per cent. of the State of Washington is devoted to agriculture. When the Doctor was asked by a Federal inspector why he did not introduce short-horn cattle on the Reservation, his answer, that long-horned cattle that could browse in the tree-tops would be more desirable, was quite justified. The alluvial flats of the river bottoms do present remarkable opportunities for farming, an average of 150 bushels of oats per acre having been established. The Skagit Valley presented this situation to us for miles. The morning before our departure had given us a brief but wonderful view of Mt. Rainier and the Olympics. As we sped northward, Mt. Baker presided with snow-clad majesty over the scene. It was not till 3:30 that we reached Lumini. At a glance it was apparent that many Indians were assembled. When we were seated in the school-house, seventy-five could be counted, with something of a crowd at the door. It was explained that the officials from Washington had come to hear what they had to say particularly about the dance.

(To be continued.)

FRIEND, INDEED!

(This is copied from a recent issue of the Youths' Companion.)

Into one of the ruined villages of France, razed and desolated by the Germans in their retreat, says the World Outlook, came one day a party of the "Men in Gray," the Friends, or Quakers, of England, who, although their religion will not permit them to fight, are spending their strength to restore the ravages of fighting.

In that village lived Marie, who in the pleasant days, before the war, had dwelt happily with her father and mother, her old grandmother and baby brother, in a comfortable red-roofed cottage. Now the father was at the front, the cottage was burned and the lonely, frightened, half-starved family of four had taken refuge in the corner of a cellar.

When Marie saw the "Men in Gray" she took courage. She had heard of the wonderful things done by those quiet Englishmen with the red star and the black star on their sleeves. Moreover, she was rich. She had six sous, and was therefore in a position to undertake a real estate negotiation.

"Maman," she said to her mother, "would not the 'Men in Gray' build us a cottage for my six sous?"

"Non, Non," said the mother.

But Marie persisted. "I will ask them," she announced. "You must not trouble them. They would laugh at you." The weary sad mother told the little girl; but Marie had the dauntless spirit of the women of France, and she was tired of the dark, damp cellar, where Grandmere coughed all night, and where there was no furniture, only rags to lie on. So with her six sous tight in her hand, she stole forth and sought the "Men in Gray."

"Sir," she said to the one who met her, "could you build a cottage with a living-room, kitchen and bed-room for Grandmere, Maman, my brother and me? Could you do it for six sous. See, I have the money?" She opened her hand and showed the coins, "Is it enough?"

The tall Friend never smiled. "Quite enough," he said, "in fact, I think it can be done with four sous. We will build it at once."

Marie got her cottage, a comfortable shelter, with beds and all necessities in it, and when everything was complete the "Man in Gray" collected the four sous with all the formality of completing a large transaction.

In a world where so many humans seemed to have turned into devils, doing things that we supposed human beings had climbed far above, incidents like these are very cheering. They are an earnest that when peace has returned not only will the desolated regions be restored as well as modern skill and labor can restore them, but the work will be done with gentleness and with tact.

TUNESASSA NOTES.

If we could only show Tunesassa itself to the members of our Yearly Meeting, how it would help the work done there! This was the feeling of one visitor who, though she had heard many excellent Reports, made her first visit but recently.

Five members of the Committee met there on the evening of Fourth Month 27th. Our friend J. E., who had preceded the rest of us by several days, had arranged for a conference with the old students that evening, and some of them arrived in the afternoon, and took supper with us; substantial men and women, who showed the same pleasure in returning, and talking over "old times" at the School, that we have felt on similar occasions at Westwton.

Speaking of the bad boys of past days, one man said, "When the boys ran away, the Friends used to chafe after them." But when A. D. came here, he said, "Let them run! That kind of boys no good anyhow. We don't want them." And they didn't run away so much."

The possibilities of an Old Scholars' Association and other matters tending toward a greater sense of responsibility toward the School on the part of the Indians, were discussed when we gathered in the parlor after the supper. The guests kept dropping in until, with the officers of the School and the Committee, we were quite a party, ranging in age down to a plump, dark-eyed baby. J. E. was successful in overcoming reserve and diffidence, and gathering opinions from nearly every one present, so that the Conference must have some effect.

One of our teachers, who is about leaving the School, expressed her wish that this move for co-operation had begun while she could have had the benefit of it.

Visiting has been rendered more difficult by the broken bridge, which had one span carried off by the ice gorge of last Winter, and the river must be crossed in small boats. This is delaying the receipt of the automobile which has been given to the School, and is purchased, but can not be delivered, though its coming promises to be a great help.

It also delays the moving of Henry B. Leeds and wife to their attractive cottage, which is nearly ready for them. Both in its plan and finish, and in the beauty of situation, it will be a choice home, and a great improvement to the property.

On First-day morning the Meeting for Worship seemed a time of united seeking for those "reserves of strength," which, we were assured, our Heavenly Father has in store for us, just as truly as He has stores of coal and oil and iron, and other means of supplying our physical needs through the resources of the material world.

Some earnest words were spoken by Lewis Jemison, the Indian care-taker of the boys, whose concern for his charges is evident. The behavior of the students was quiet and reverent, both in meeting and in the afternoon Bible Class, taught by Henry Leeds, and the evening gathering in the parlor, before a beautiful open fire.

Second-day morning brought the routine of duties, for the Tunesassa family is a busy one. Three small boys, under the usual age, and at the School for special reasons, sleep a little later as they "have no chores;" but hasty feet on the stairs showed the others were speeding toward the barn, and boys as well as girls help with the laundry work.

The cooking, done by the girls, was good, and they waited on the tables neatly and deftly.

The two class-rooms and the sewing-room were visited. In the latter, at a time of leisure, it was pleasant to watch two small Indian maidens, busy with patchwork, making quilts for the poor little French babies. A real lesson in Internationalism.

One can still see needs at Tunesassa, despite improvements the two past years have brought, yet we came away with the impression of good work being done with the tools in hand, and a conviction that the work is well worth while.

The workers lead an isolated life, and give a most hearty welcome to visitors, and these could not fail to enjoy the beautiful country, and the interesting life of the School and reservation.

F. T. R.

TEMPERANCE.

A department edited by BENJAMIN F. WHITSON, of Moylan, Pa., on behalf of the Friends' Temperance Association of Philadelphia.

THE RESPONSE to our appeal in THE FRIEND OF Fifth Month 2nd for volunteers who will use posters and leaflets favorable to prohibition has amounted in all to one request. No doubt our readers are desirous to do all they can for prohibition, but find it impossible to spare time for much systematic work. But a good poster in a public place is a valuable service. A forceful circular to each employee or to every associate in college or office is helpful. Here is an advertisement that could do no harm in a local paper. Send a copy to the editor and ask him if he will not use it for the public good.

SALOON BUSINESS DISCREDITED IN SPITE OF GEORGE WASHINGTON'S WINE CELLAR.

George Washington owned a wine cellar—we are told by some ardent saloon defenders. Others go so far as to say that he was also an inn-keeper.

Therefore, they assume, it's all right in this day and generation for a man to own a wine-cellar and run a saloon.

But George Washington was also a slave-owner. Whether he was a kind slave-owner or a brutal slave-owner, doesn't make any difference. We are sure that he owned slaves.

Shall we also assume that it's all right for men in this day and generation to own slaves?

Suppose President Woodrow Wilson owned a slave-pen because his illustrious predecessor, George Washington, owned one?

It doesn't require a great stretch of the imagination to picture what would happen to him, even though he is President of the United States.

Standards change. What may have been accepted one hundred years ago is now outlawed.

Our ideals advance. What may have been considered moral and right long ago is now scorned as the ethics of the jungle.

The saloon business to-day is a discredited business, no matter whether George Washington owned a wine cellar or not.

That's why no man who cares anything about his standing or the standing of his wife and children goes into the liquor business.

You can't charge it up to George Washington, either, for he did the best he knew in his day and generation.

And the world expects every man to do his level best TODAY. When a man sees clearly, and feels and knows that he's doing wrong, he can't expect to get any mercy because some other fellow in a darker age was guilty of the same sin.

If you believe that the traffic in Alcohol does more harm than good—HELP STOP IT!

STRENGTHEN AMERICA CAMPAIGN.

LOST JOBS NOT THE ONLY CONSIDERATION is the title of a little folder we have for distribution. It is as follows, using irony of language to show the wrong that must be apparent to every sensitive spirit.

More than half the world is engaged in the bloodiest war in all history—and because of it every man has a job, probably at the highest wages that he ever received.

Wouldn't it be a shame to stop this war and thus throw out of work a large number of mechanics?

What though the lives of millions of men are sacrificed and countless widows and orphans remain to suffer. Who cares whether cities are destroyed and treasures ruined—let the war go on, for if you stop it, you may create a labor panic!

We are told there are 500,000 prostitutes in the United States—more people than are employed in the wholesale and retail liquor business as well as in the manufacture of liquor.

These 500,000 women furnish an enormous amount of work of all kinds for mechanics and storekeepers. They require a large number of buildings; they buy a great deal of household furniture; thousands of dressmakers are given employment; jewelers are kept busy; chauffeurs and druggists are supported and an endless number of men and women are employed as electricians, bar-tenders, chambermaids, housekeepers, messenger boys, waiters and musicians—and these honest working people help make this business a success.

If we destroy the White Slave traffic, we would take away the jobs of all these workers. Shall we, therefore, continue to encourage the White Slave traffic?

What does it matter whether our daughters are sacrificed—and whether our sons are forever ruined—the main thing is that these working people who are now supported by the white slave traffic should not lose their jobs.

Same way with the liquor business. Everybody knows its effect upon those who are engaged in it and upon those who use its product—but in the minds of a very considerable number of people the only consideration is this—how many men will lose their jobs if the liquor business is abolished?

Nothing else seems to count.

Have we gone mad? Isn't there anything else besides the purely commercial aspects of this business that one must consider? Do the bodies and the souls of our loved ones count for nothing?

Isn't it time that we came to our senses and forever destroyed the liquor business?

If you believe that the traffic in Alcohol does more harm than good—Help Stop It!

WHAT WILL BECOME OF THE BAR-TENDERS? is another good leaflet to slip in with a letter or to hand out promiscuously.

There are 100,000 bar-tenders in the United States—at least that's what Uncle Sam tells us.

What will become of these bar-tenders when all the saloons are closed?

What makes a man a successful bar-tender? It's the fact that he's a good salesman, a good mixer, he knows how to deal with men, and the man who is a success as a bar-tender, will be a success as a salesman in almost any other kind of store.

The fact is, it requires many more people to sell two billion dollars worth of bread and clothing, for example, than it does to sell two billion dollars worth of liquor.

Furthermore, most bar-tenders had some other kind of a job before they became bar-tenders.

A man doesn't become a bar-tender until he is nearly twenty or more—before that time he worked as a mechanic, or as a salesman, or he was engaged in some other occupation to which he may return—provided he hasn't been shot all to pieces on account of the liquor business.

Here's a quotation that tells the story:

"The closing of the saloon merely forces the bar-tender to change from a bad job to a good job—from a job in which he hurts his fellow-men, to a job in which he helps his fellow-men.

When a bar-tender puts a man out of a job, he disgraces the man, disgraces his family, and makes him unfitted for another job.

When No-License puts a bar-tender out of a job, he becomes a more honorable citizen, his family becomes more honorable, and the community secures a wealth-producing workman, instead of a wealth-destroying workman.

It is better—far better—that the bar-tender should lose his job and become fitted for a better one, than that scores of his patrons should lose their jobs and be unfitted for any job."

If you believe that the traffic in Alcohol does more harm than good—Help Stop It!

[THE FRIEND is printed and mailed every week almost as regularly as the clock runs and this has been its record for nearly ninety-one years.

We know it reaches you, the subscribers, with great irregularity, for no issue is allowed to go out without traces.

When the paper is late in reaching you the cause can be traced to the post office or railroad service, and with both of these you are asked again to exercise much patience. First class mail matter must have priority, and we believe you recognize with the impossibility of making matters better under existing circumstances.—Eps.]

NEWS ITEMS.

CHARLES EVANS CABLES "DO NOT LET SUBSCRIPTIONS OR VOLUNTEERS FALL OFF."—(New York Opened to Friends)—There is a peculiar interest which attaches to a cable. Letters from France are always three weeks old at best; the cable brings Paris almost as close as New York and Chicago. A letter from the war zones often seems like history; a cable is always news. Cables are usually the heralds of the more important events, urging the immediate beginning of new plans. The following cable has just come to hand and we pass it on to the readers of THE FRIEND:

"Opportunities for broadening agricultural, building and relief work in old centres of the Marne require more workers. Buildings and relief for refugees required near Dole and Ornans. Red Cross requests us to care for six thousand refugees in Sarthe. We ask for seventy-five more men, eight women relief workers and six nurses' aides. More money and supplies will be needed for increased needs. Do not let subscriptions or volunteers fall off through underestimate of requirements."

This number is in addition to the three hundred men called for last First Month. About one hundred of these have been sent, and more than one hundred more have been selected, many of whom, however, are in military camps and cannot be sent until they are released for this service.

The cable is chiefly important for its news of increasing fields of work to which the Friends' Unit has been called. We shall need more volunteers, both men and women. Interest among prospective women volunteers has been lessened because of the very few requests we have had for women workers. News of this call for women workers should be given to all who are qualified. A knowledge of French is required of the relief workers, but most of those who have had sufficient nursing experience to qualify as nurses' aides.

We shall need a large increase in our monthly receipts. We urge all subscribers to the work, who are able to do so, to make such an increase in their subscriptions, beginning with Sixth Month 1st. We know that many are giving all they can afford to give, but we hope that many others will be able to double their subscriptions. It is of tremendous importance that we be able quickly to take advantage of all of these new openings for service. Otherwise, the opportunities will go elsewhere and the Friends' Unit will be in the position of the man who buried his talent.

FRIENDS' SERVICE NOTES.—The members of the American Friends' Reconstruction Unit while in Philadelphia on their way to France stop at the Friends' Arch Street Centre. The last party to sail for France numbered twenty men. At a dinner of these men the last evening before they left Philadelphia, speeches were made by Rufus M. Jones, Henry J. Cadbury and Vincent D. Nicholson.

ROBERT TATLOCK, leader of the Friends' Expedition in Russia, has completed his lecture tour in the United States and expects to sail for Russia via Vladivostok early next month, after interviewing the small party of English Friends who have been working in Russia, and who have just landed at Vancouver on their way home for their first furlough since the opening of work in Russia two years ago.

The recent Woodbrooke Conference of English Friends upon the practice of Christian methods in business, was attended by over one hundred employers who control in their various factories and shops, 100,000 workers. The complete proceedings, including the impressive closing address of the Conference, will be available in pamphlet form and will be very profitable reading.

The Survey, in a late issue published an article on "Reconstruction Under Fire," in which the assistance rendered by our Friends' Unit in the evacuation of French villages during the recent drive was referred to with commendation.

The New World for Fifth Month contains a reprint of the recent statement of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting as to the position of Friends on the question of war. In a closing paragraph, the article commends highly the work of our Reconstruction Unit in France.

"NIGHT AND DAY THEY HAVE BEEN ON THE JOB."—Many high tributes have been paid by American Red Cross Officials to the work of our Unit in assisting the refugee population in the recent evacuation of the Somme and Aisne. We published one last week from Edward Eyre Hunt. We have just received another in a letter addressed to Charles Evans by Wm. B. J. Jackson. A group of our men and women were put under the direction of W. B. Jackson at Beauvais (Oise), where several hundred refugees were cared for each day, made up into trains and sent on into southern France. His letter is as follows:

BEAUVAIS, (Oise), April 13, 1918.

MR. CHARLES EVANS, American Red Cross,

12 Rue Boissy d'Anglais, Paris.

DEAR MR. EVANS:—

The following members of your Unit left to-day to report to you at headquarters, their work here having come to an end:

Miss Glancy, Miss Young, Miss White, Mr. Bell, Mr. Howell, Mr. Sidney Brown, Mr. Southworth, Mr. Cope, Mr. Hobbs, Mr. Marshall.

I cannot say too strongly how effective the work of these Friends has been. There has been nothing at which they, either man or woman, have balked, and night and day they have been "on the job."

I regret very much that the present circumstances do not justify their remaining here much longer, for it is a real pleasure to work with such people.

With my kindest regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

[Signed] Wm. B. JACKSON.

Delegate

REPORT OF THE TREASURER OF THE AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE FOR WEEK ENDING FIFTH MONTH 25, 1918.

Received from 25 Meetings	$9,346.55
Received from 18 Individuals	957.00
Received for Armenian and Syrian Relief	23.50
Received for Supplies	97.75

$10,140.60

CHARLES F. JENKINS,

Treasurer.

The following is taken from a recent number of the American Friend—
THE STRENGTH OF SACRIFICE.—(By Paul Furnas)—"When we have sacrificed more—done more for humanity than those who believe in war, then, and not until then, can we be proud of the fact that we are Quakers."

This morning I came into the office of the Young Friends' Board after three weeks as an "Itinerant Preacher" of the Message of Relief and Reconstruction; making "one night stands" with a stereopticon; traveling through the country in a motor car. I have faced out utter unpreparedness as Friends to meet the present crying need for a way of life that is equal to the spiritual crisis. But as I have sat at family worship, at the breakfast table, or grasped the hand of a girl in her teens, fired with the challenge to us as Friends, or have received the benediction of an elderly Friend who speaks with the conviction and knowledge of a life lived to its closing days with Christ, I have come to know with great thankfulness of heart where the strength of Friends, and I believe the greatest strength of our nation, lies.

When I reached the office this morning, I found much interesting and heartening correspondence. From one letter written by one of the boys in the conscientious objectors' group at Camp Dodge, is quoted the significant statement at the head of this paragraph.

And then as if in answer to his challenge, I found a letter from a woman sixty-four years of age who had sacrificed all for Christ's Kingdom, among the people of the back country of Ontario for twenty-seven years. She and her husband have for years been driving twenty miles weekly, through country so rocky and barren that they must take with them grain for their horse, in order to carry the good news to the back country people on Echo and Island Lakes.

The first letter alluded to is this:—

Co. B, 763 DEPOT BRIGADE, Camp Dodge, Iowa

THE YOUNG FRIENDS' BOARD, RICHMOND, IND.:—

Dear Friends:—I was indeed happy to receive your message "To Our Boys in the Army and Navy." To us who have been standing as conscientious objectors, it is especially welcome. Although I am to receive my discharge to join the Reconstruction Unit in a few days, I can understand and share the sentiment of the soldier when he sings, "Keep the Home Fires Burning."

During the past few weeks I have felt a deep concern for the influence of Friends during and after the war. In some localities Friends have been placed in Class V and taken it as a matter of course that they could go on living normal lives while others were making untold sacrifices. It is this attitude that makes it hard for us now and it is this attitude that will neutralize the influence of Friends after the war. It seems to me that every Friend who would properly be placed in Class I should enter the Reconstruction Unit. In addition to these I would suggest that we secure a number of men outside the draft.

When we have sacrificed more—done more for humanity than those who believe in war, then, and not until then, can we be proud of the fact that we are Quakers.

The deep concern which I feel has made it necessary that I write thus at length. Our sacrifice should be commensurate with the needs of our day.

Hoping you will be able to take some definite action on this problem, I remain,

OSKALOOSA, IOWA.

DUANE McCracken.

DR. HODGKIN IN AUSTRALIA.—Geo. Vaux, Jr.'s interesting review of the life of the late Dr. Hodgkin, which appeared in a recent number of THE FRIEND, has influenced several to read the book for themselves, in every instance of course to their great satisfaction. The following message of appreciation is taken from the Australian Friend:—

But to Australasia Friends the chief interest of Dr. Hodgkin's life centres in his visit, with his wife, his daughter Violet, and his son George, to Australia in the year 1909. This visit is still lovingly remembered as an event of yesterday. London Yearly Meeting was desirous of sending a deputation of its members to visit Friends in Australasia, but the personnel of the deputation was still to seek. Thomas Hodgkin had for some years felt a desire to visit these lands, and learn at first hand the conditions under which the British of these southern seas was being built up. His chief thought, however, was to bring a message of loving cheer to the small bodies of Friends scattered throughout Australia and New Zealand, who he felt, as we have already seen, ought to have a contribution to render to the national upbuilding. The door, however, seemed absolutely closed until medical advice on his daughter's behalf threw it wide open, and at an age bordering on eighty, the family party set their faces in this direction. It was a unique deputation, and in all its details made strong appeal to Friends in Australia. London had again sent them its very best, and that best had gladly come, sacrificing all the comforts of life at a time when such are generally hugged more closely. The love which prompted English Friends to send such a deputation breathed through every member of the deputation, and warmed the hearts of Australasian Friends wherever they came. They were able to visit all the Australian Meetings and many private homes, and to take special note of Hobarat School, in which Dr. Hodgkin had been for some time interested, and concerning which he wrote, "I can truthfully say that, though I went out believing in the School, I came back believing in it still more." Dr. Hodgkin's general impressions of the Meetings and of the Friends he had met made him hopeful for the future. He wrote: "There is, I am persuaded, 'a seed of life,' as George Fox would have called it, in many of these Meetings, and I believe it will grow from man to man without the aid of a 'pastoral system' such as they have in the Western States of America."

As regards New Zealand, the first General Meeting of the Dominion was held during the visit to those islands, and Dr. Hodgkin rejoiced that he was favored to be present. He felt that Friends there, as elsewhere, needed organization in order to make the impress upon their country that was due from them, and he rejoiced that the organization was coming into being. Who could have foretold how greatly it would be needed in days not then far ahead?

Every phase of life in these lands had an interest, and he sought information wherever he went. He was much exercised by the Defence Bill, and could not believe that Australia and New Zealand could be so short-sighted as to penalize Friends for their religious convictions. Alas! could the dear Doctor have foreseen the events shortly to happen in that dear old England which, present or absent, was always tugging at his heart strings! Dr. Hodgkin's considered opinion, often and urgently expressed, was that the one great need of Australia is population, and his plan to safeguard the future was not in a few people trained to arms, but in many occupying the empty spaces. Populate, populate, populate, was ever his cry, and the attitude, or what he conceived to be the attitude, of the Labor Party on this question was one that he could not understand, and considered suicidal.

Space does not permit of our following Dr. Hodgkin and his family into all the byways of their Australasian journeys. They did not spare themselves, and what they were able to accomplish, having regard to all their circumstances, was wonderful. Louise Creighton says, "But Thomas Hodgkin's chief contribution to the Society of Friends was himself." Truly Australasian Friends experienced no small share of the gift.

NOTICES.

WESTTOWN SCHOOL.—The stage will meet at Westtown Station trains leaving Broad Street Station, Philadelphia (Penna. R. R.), at 6.21, 8.21 A. M., and 2.15, 3.35, 4.55 P. M., other trains will be met on request. Stage fare twenty-five cents each way. To reach the School by telegraph, address West Chester, Bell Telephone, 1016.

E. DEAN STANTON,
Business Manager.

MEETINGS FROM SIXTH MONTH 2ND TO SIXTH MONTH 8th:—

Kennett Monthly Meeting, at Kennett Square, Third-day, Sixth Month 4th, at 10 A. M.

Chesterfield, at Crosswicks, Third-day, Sixth Month 4th, at 10 A. M.

Chester, N. J., at Moorestown, Third-day, Sixth Month 4th, at 7.30 P. M.

Bradford, at Cotesville, Fourth-day, Sixth Month 5th, at 10 A. M.

New Garden, at Westgrove, Fourth-day, Sixth Month 5th, at 10 A. M.

Upper Springfield, at Mansfield, Fourth-day, Sixth Month 5th, at 10 A. M.

Haddonfield, Fourth-day, Sixth Month 5th, at 7.30 P. M.

Wilmington, Fifth-day, Sixth Month 6th, at 7.30 P. M.

Fritchlan, at Downingtown, Fifth-day, Sixth Month 6th, at 10.30 A. M.

London Grove, Fifth-day, Sixth Month 6th, at 10 A. M.

Falls, at Fallstown, Fifth-day, Sixth Month 6th, at 7.30 P. M.

Evesham, at Mt. Laurel, Fifth-day, Sixth Month 6th, at 10 A. M.

Upper Evesham, at Medford, Seventh-day, Sixth Month 8th, at 10 A. M.

DIED.—At his home, Whittier, Iowa, Third Month 29, 1918, ROBERT W. HAMPTON, in his eighty-third year; a member of Springville Monthly Meeting, Iowa.

Founded 1865
THE PROVIDENT
Life and Trust Company
of Philadelphia

Will life be worth living at 65 ?

Doesn't it depend largely upon whether you have an income?

Look up the Provident
Income Insurance

Fourth and Chestnut Streets

H. F. BRUNER

S. D. HALL

H. F. BRUNER & Co.
COAL

OFFICE AND YARD

16 N. TWENTY-FIRST STREET
PHILADELPHIA

TELEPHONES: 1 LOCUST 241
2 RACE 661

Friends Arch St. Centre
304 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Provides comfortable accommodations for guests by the day or week. Meals at moderate prices.

AMELIA D. FEATHERSTONE, Matron.

PROB.—MARKET 1871.

WM. H. PILE'S SONS

BOOK AND JOB PRINTING

422 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO THE
PRINTING OF BOOKS AND CATALOGS

GLASLYN-CHATHAM

PARK PLACE

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

A Family Home of Established Reputation.
Open Throughout the Year.

NATHAN L. JONES.

ALBERT C. RIDLEY
1714 SANSOM STREET

Engraving and Printing
FINE BUSINESS STATIONERY

Wedding Invitations, Calling Cards, Greeting Cards, Die Stamped Writing Paper

TELEPHONE—LOCUST 1782

M. GATCHEL

126 N. 21st St., PHILA.

MILLINERY, PLAIN AND FANCY

Phone, Spruce 3032

POCONO MANOR INN
POCONO MANOR, PA.

SPRINGTIME in the Pocono Mountains is ever a delight to those who admire and study nature. The Birds and Flowers are numerous and varied, and the Trout Fishing in the Swiftwater is wonderful.

J. W. HURLEY, Manager
(Pocono Summit Station, D. L. & W. R. R.)

WOOLMAN SCHOOL

A Friends' School for Social and Religious Education.

Six Weeks Summer Term:
Seventh Month 1—Eighth Month 10, 1918.

Courses in Hebrew Prophecy, Teaching of Jesus, History of Friends in the Nineteenth Century, Social Service, First-day School Teaching for Children and Adolescents, The Bible in the Schools, and Internationalism.

Send for Circular.

ELBERT RUSSELL, Director,
WOOLMAN SCHOOL,
SWARTHMORE, PA.

W. B. WEAVER
UNDERTAKER and EMBALMER

550-552 N. 5TH ST., PHILA., PA.

Special Attention Given to Funerals
In and Out of the City. Also Chapel
Accommodations for Funerals.

BELL 'PHONE 4 ESTABLISHED 1880

To enjoy good health and a sound digestion use

PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT BREAD

made from the entire wheat grain ground on a stone mill. A perfect food and natural regulator. Sold by all good grocers in Philadelphia.

Write for particulars to

PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT CO.

10th & Susquehanna Ave., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

WALL PAPERS—All Grades

Custom of Friends Specially Solicited

FRANK C. BUEHL

Successor to S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON
902 SPRING GARDEN ST. - PHILADELPHIA
Store open until 10.30 A. M. Any other time by appointment only
Opposite Spring Garden Station, Phila. & Reading R. R.
ESTABLISHED 1849. BELL 'PHONE.

"FRIENDS AND THE INDIANS"

FOR SALE AT $1.50 BY

FRIENDS' BOOK STORE
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

HARRY S. LEE

313 WALNUT STREET

PAINTER AND GRAINER

ANTIQUe and OFFICE FURNITURE RESTORED
JOBGING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO
ESTIMATES

BUSINESS men who are looking for a new printing connection are invited to get acquainted with

THE HOLMES PRESS

J Linton Engle, Pres. 1336 Cherry Street, Phila.

JOSEPH G. FOGG

FUNERAL DIRECTOR and EMBALMER

S. W. Cor. Sixteenth and Race Streets

Special attention given to Friends' Funerals
Bell 'Phone 11 Spruce 1646

POCONO MANOR ASSOCIATION.

The Oakwood and Acorn Cottages, at Pocono Manor, will be opened about Sixth Month 20, 1918, for the accommodation of Friends, at moderate rates. Early application for rooms and board should be made to

LYDIA B. KITE,
Collingswood, N. J.

CAMP OWAISSA For Girls.

A modest-priced camp on Naomi Lake in the Poconos; central bungalow, with fire place and dining porch; all tents have raised floors, facing lake; swimming, basket-ball, horse-back riding, over-night hikes, etc.; Red Cross work; limited to thirty-five girls; counselors all Friends.

EVALYN M. PAXSON,
No. 2414 Bryn Mawr Ave., Philada.

The Track of the Storm

Tales of the Marne, the Meuse, and the Aube, by Margaret B. Crook, B. A. These are inspired by incidents in the Relief Work of English Friends in this region, and are graphically narrated.

Price, bound in paper, 55c. postpaid.

For Sale By

Friends' Book and Tract Committee

144 East 20th St. New York City

WANTED—IMMEDIATELY—A STENOGRAPHER.
Will pay prevailing rate of salary.

AMERICANS' FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE,
26 South 12th Street, Phila., Pa.

A FEW SUMMER BOARDERS CAN BE ACCOMMODATED at our farm; rates reasonable. Apply

Phone J. C. 8, West Grove 161, R. 5. SUE R. SHARPLESS, Chester County, Pa.

A ASSISTANT HOUSEKEEPER—WANTED A T
A Friends' Academy, a boarding and day-school for boys and girls at Locust Valley, Long Island, New York.

Address F. E. WILLIAMS, PRESIDENT,
Glen Cove, N. Y.

WANTED—A TEACHER FOR THE FRIENDS'
School at West Chester, Pa., for the next term to be giving in Ninth Month, 1918.

Address MARIAN S. PAINTER,
West Chester, Pa.

FOR RENT—EIGHT-ROOM FURNISHED COTTAGE, bath, open plumbing, hot and cold water, town and spring water. Several meals daily, half hour ferry service to Newport and Narragansett Pier. Excellent family territory where there are one of more invalids in family. Meals may be taken at Maplewood.
Apply DR. W. LINCOLN BATES,
Jamestown, R. I.

Cheyney Institute

offers an opportunity each year to one hundred picked colored youths to train themselves in leadership. No people have a more just claim on the sympathy and help of others than those colored people who have faith in the future of their race through wise training.

Cheyney Institute offers this training and has proved by its graduates that it merits generous support.

The Managers endeavor to administer the Trust they have assumed, but must look to Friends and others for financial assistance in the work for these one hundred young men and women.

The Institute also offers a unique course for teachers in its Summer School. Most of the Eastern and Southern States are represented at this School and testimonials of the advantages gained from the Summer courses would satisfy the most skeptical.

Leslie P. Hill, Principal, is always ready to offer timely suggestions to any who have it on their hearts to assist in the laudable work that is carried on at Cheyney.

Because of the conditions which must be met, if the School is to continue its good work, the Board of Managers feel free to request Friends to include Cheyney among the charities to which they contribute, and ask that checks shall be drawn in favor of and mailed to

WILLIAM BIDDLE, Treasurer,
119 S. Fourth St., Philadelphia.

RESIDENCE: 254 S. 44th St. BELL 'PHONE: Baring 2084X

WILLIAM OAKES

Plumbing and Heating Contractor
ALSO LEAD BURNING

260 SOUTH TENTH STREET

PHILADELPHIA

Bank 'Phone: Elders 2695A.

SEE WALKER & KEPLER

FOR

Good Electrical Work

531 CHESTNUT ST. - PHILA.

Philadelphia's
Representative Store

ELKINS, MORRIS & CO.

BANKERS

REPRESENTATIVES

PAUL W. BROWN

JAMES P. MAGILL

LAND TITLE BUILDING
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

RAILROAD AND PUBLIC UTILITY BONDS

FOR

CONSERVATIVE INVESTMENT.

FULL PARTICULARS ON REQUEST.

We recommend the use of
RAG FEATHERWEIGHT

(Antique Finish)

As the paper for high-grade Books and other Publications

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE MATERIAL THAT WE SELL

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY

MANUFACTURERS

PHILADELPHIA

ALFRED C. HAINES

Building Glass and Paints

56 N. Front St., Philadelphia.

R. C. Ballinger Ernest R. Yarnall John A. Stratton
TELEPHONES

Ball—Spruce 17-81 - - Keystone—Race 637

R. C. BALLINGER & CO.

CONTRACTORS and BUILDERS

218 N. Thirteenth St. Philadelphia.

Letchworth Cottage
Spring Lake Beach, N. J.

Open for the Season 1918

A. C. & S. H. Letchworth

Established 1870 Both Phones

Frank W. Taylor & Son

Roofers in Tin, Tile, Slate,
Copper and Slag,
Manufacturers of Ranges
and Furnaces

FURNACES, RANGES & HOT WATER SYSTEMS
installed and cared for by expert mechanics

259 S. FOURTH ST., PHILADELPHIA

Genealogist

Elizabeth B. Satterthwaite
48 E. Houston St., Trenton, N. J.

New Strength
In Securities

IN the face of Germany's onslaughts in Europe, the securities market has shown convincing strength.

Our current list of bonds and short-term notes includes issues combining in unusual degree intrinsic value and liberal yield.

Send for PF-100

The National City
Company

Correspondent Offices in 24 Cities
Philadelphia—1421 Chestnut St.

Telephone—555 Locust

Bonds Short Term Notes Acceptances

SHETLAND PONIES

Oldest Herd in United States
Established 1883

Specially attractive prices just now owing to change in business arrangements

HARTZELL BROS., - SEBRING, OHIO
Importers and Breeders

FOR RENT—WERNERSVILLE, PA.
BUNGALOW

of 7 rooms, bath, electric lighting, running water, etc.
Near Galen Hall Hotel. For Seventh and Eighth Months.

TATNALL & CO.,

P. O. Box 298, WILMINGTON, DEL.

Premier Duplicating Co.

Mimeographing, Multigraphing, Printing, Type-writing, Addressing, Mailing, etc.

630 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 91.

FIFTH-DAY, SIXTH MONTH 6, 1918.

No. 49.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price $2.00 a year in Advance.

Publisher, DAVIS H. FORSYTHE.

Editors { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
 { DAVIS H. FORSYTHE,
 { MARY WARD.

Make remittances payable to

THE FRIEND,

NO. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

"THE GRACE OF HOSPITALITY."

According to the Century Dictionary, hospitality is "the act or practice of a hospitable person." It is giving welcome and entertainment to strangers or guests, "with liberality and goodwill," says Murray. Both definitions indicate that, back of the action, there is a state of mind which must be taken into account,—a personal quality or virtue, without which real hospitality is impossible. Indeed the Greek root implies as much. No merely conventional observances, large or small, can be an equivalent, and no counterfeit can long be undetected. Viewed as a duty only, and taken in a narrow sense, the obligation to hospitality does, it is true, enter abstractly into certain codes of ethics, even amongst savage or barbarous peoples, by whom it is often practised scrupulously according to rule. For illustrations of this, one has but to mention the "red Indian" or the desert Bedouin, in whose rude dwelling or tent even an enemy may find sanctuary. In such stages of the development of human society, these requirements have had very definite boundaries; but the notion of obligation to a stranger because he is a stranger, is so ancient and so nearly universal that it seems almost to belong to the elementary or primal traits of the race. The "guest's right," we are told, was recognized in a condition of community life in which the essentials of food and drink were regarded not as articles of merchandise, but as common property,—the guest's right, however, and consequently the host's duty, having specific limitations as to time and extent.

If the ethical standards of primitive life call for so much consideration to strangers and travelers, we could not expect those of advanced civilization (especially Christian civilization) to require less. The New Testament gives us several fine lessons on this subject, showing the basis and informing spirit of true hospitality. It is practically the same principle as that which would constrain a person to exceed the requirements of law and custom, and so to go two miles rather than one in helping a traveler over a difficult or unfamiliar road. The neighborly act of the Good Samaritan was hospitality of a worthy kind, and illustrated the truth that the Master Himself may be received and served in the person of one of the least of His brethren.

"Forget not to show love to strangers," is the revised form of the familiar exhortation in Hebrews; and Peter's encouragement to the saints to use hospitality "one to another without grudging" follows his entreaty that above all things they should be fervent in love among themselves. There is nothing essentially exclusive about this; but a larger exercise of Christian obligation is set before us in the recommendation to do good to all, as we have opportunity, though "especially to them who are of the household of faith." Again, Paul says that a bishop, or overseer, must be a man who was given to hospitality, and that those widows who were to be selected for particular care or for responsible stations should be such as had used hospitality to strangers. The forms of this service would, of course, have some reference to the necessities of climate, travel, and so forth; hence the terms used in our Lord's appealing rebuke to the Pharisee in whose house He was a guest.—"Thou gavest me no water for my feet."

When we think of the inevitable hardships of those early evangelizing embassies described in the book of Acts, and of the great help and cheer of such reception as Paul and his companions enjoyed in the house of Lydia and in that of Philip the Evangelist, it is easy to see why the virtue of hospitality is so much emphasized in the various apostolic advices. The practice of the early Christians in this respect has been notably reproduced, and perhaps amplified, in the Society of Friends, particularly in times when there were more "itinerant preachers" than there are now, and when modes of travel and means of public entertainment were less convenient. Read memorials of Rebecca Jones and the narrative of Mary Pryor for pleasant pictures of such services of Friend to Friend in that time; or recall the "liberality and goodwill" of the household at Swarthmoor Hall during the stirring and troublous times of the first half-century of Quaker history. George Fox, too, who knew so well the comfort of such a haven, knew also what it was to suffer want in this particular; and he made testamentary provision, according to his means, for the refreshment of Friends who might come from a distance to the meeting at "Pettyes," and also for a close "to put Friends' horses in when they come to ye meetings" in Philadelphia.

But perhaps no more beautiful instances of the practice of hospitality among early Friends can be found than in the account of William and Alice Ellis, of Airton, in Yorkshire. With one heart and one mind they served the Lord and His children in this way, and made singular stipulations in their wills for the continuation of such service, so far as the use of their property was concerned. In the testimony of the Quarterly Meeting held at York, it was said of William Ellis that he was "given to charity, and used hospitality much, his heart and house being very open to entertain such as traveled, or were concerned in Truth's service." The testimony of Settle Monthly Meeting concerning Alice Ellis (who survived her husband several years) describes her as "being very free to distribute part of what she had gained by great pains and industry, when she met with suitable opportunities, and it would in any wise tend to advance the honour of Truth, amongst Friends or others not of our Society, she being in a particular manner devoted to acts of hospitality in many respects; the which, in her lifetime, was evidently demonstrated to be her great delight."

If the modes of living and of travel in the present age render unnecessary or impracticable the same exercise of hospitality that was formerly witnessed, the spirit of it, being that of love and interest and Christian care, will still find ways of expression. Hugh Black says, "Its very essence is sympathy and kindness, and that can be shown by many a token. A pleasant look will sometimes do it, and reveal a hospitable heart; a kind word where it comes natural; a helpful hand where opportunity offers. We can all be more accessible and friendly and considerate, ready and willing to do a service." Writing on this subject in "A Christmas Sermon," he naturally applies the familiar Scripture references, not omitting that in regard to entertaining angels, and then observes: "The hospitable mind is its own best blessing. The loving heart is its own true reward. The generous soul has unawares had an angel for a guest." M. W.

THE QUAKER CONCEPTION OF THE CHURCH.

"The Quaker Conception of the Church" is the title of a brief essay recently published by the Henry H. Mosher Fund, of New England and New York Yearly Meetings. It was written by Rufus M. Jones at the request of the Trustees of the Fund. The Trustees have given it a free distribution among the members of the two Yearly Meetings and it can be had for ten cents a copy through our own Book Store at 304 Arch Street, Philadelphia. We encourage Friends to procure copies for themselves. We give the concluding paragraphs.—Eds.]

They [the early Friends] refused to use this great word "church" in any lower sense. It must not be applied to a building. "There came a professor," George Fox says, "and gave me a push in the breast in the steeplehouse and bade me get out of the church. 'Alack,' said I, 'dost thou call the steeplehouse the church? The church is the people whom God hath purchased with His blood; and not the house.'" In other places Fox calls "the people of whom Christ is Head" the church. No structure of stones and mortar, no creation of carpenters, however lofty and beautiful, could be a church, for only Christ Himself can build a church and His church is the church. No sectarian, denominational body can, they thought, be properly called a church. That is, again, like the building, a man-made affair. It is cut away and separated from the true communion of saints. It is a thing apart, with its own "notions," and its own private interpretations of Scripture. It may have within its separate fold many members who belong to the invisible church and who recognize Christ as their Head, but it itself is not a church—it is only a sect more or less dismembered by its form of organization and its exclusive spirit from the one true church, whose name it wrongly assumes.

It was for these reasons that Friends refused to call themselves, in their organized capacity, a church. There was only one, there could be only one, church. They were in it and of it, but it was much larger than their visible group. They formed a society of persons who were in Christ's church, and they wanted above everything else to see all the other scattered members of this church gathered into the one great flock of Christ, under the one true Shepherd.

They worked out a type of organization that fitted this central conception of theirs. They got as far away as possible from the model of existing churches, which in their mind belonged to the "apostasy" and to "anti-Christ." It must not, above all, be a man-made or a man-governed institution. It must not be an organization governed and ruled by officials. It must be a Christ-made and a Christ-governed society or body. It must be an organism, rather than an organization. It must be the work and creation of the Spirit of Christ, operating from within and not the work and creation of human hands, building from the outside. This Society of theirs, therefore, had no visible head. Nobody managed it, nobody ran it, nobody directed it. Every step was taken, however momentous, however trivial, by the entire group acting, as it believed, under the direction and guidance of the Spirit. All ministry was, in ideal, Divinely initiated and given through unordained persons who had listened and heard, and who spoke because the word of God had come to them. All the work of propagation, the missionary tasks of the Society, the efforts to reach and gather the hidden seed of God, were undertaken by men and women who were "called" out and qualified for this Divine business and whose gifts and calling carried conviction to the minds of the Friends who composed the group to which they belonged. All business and all the moral and spiritual care of the flock was carried on in this same way. No bishop, no elder, no official of any sort settled anything for this society. Its clerk merely announced and recorded the sense of the meeting which was believed to be "the mind of Truth," i. e., the will of the Spirit. The design of the Society, as it was worked out by its founders, was to realize that dream of all spiritual reformers, that there should be in the world a fellowship of believers living in obedience to the Spirit revealed within them. It was in idea a perfect democracy, though a democracy with a difference. The usual individual self-seeking that marks democracies was here to be absent. Each individual was to be more than a bare individual. He was to be a partaker of the life of the Spirit, he was to be an organ of the indwelling Christ and so to be raised into new and corporate life with all the other members. It was thus in thought and purpose a Divine democracy, a real communion of saints, living here below, but sharing the life and mind of the eternal Christ.

The Society of Friends was free from all affiliation with the State and from all connection with every kind of political organization. It had no constitution, no creed, no sacraments, no sacred customs, no infallible system, no clergy, no necessary officers. It was, in essence, a little visible part of the whole family of God, a tiny fragment of the invisible church, a society, here on earth, of persons whose supreme desire was to belong to the one great total community of Christ's saints.

The early Friends could not under any circumstances call themselves a "Friends Church." That would sound exclusive. It would imply that the church is divided into compartments. They know only of one church, not of many churches. All they claim is that they form a society of Christ-enlightened Spirit-guided persons in the one unbroken, undivided fellowship and family of God, which is the church.

Such, in brief, is the historical Quaker position. Is it still a live idea? Does it mean anything for this present age, or is it merely worthless lumber to be discarded? The underlying principle in this historical conception of the church is as true and vital to-day as ever. The true church of Christ is a spiritual body, and it includes in its membership all persons, living and dead, who have been born anew and who are joined by faith into a fellowship with Christ, the author and finisher of faith and the only Head of the church. In this lofty sense there is only one church.

It has, however, been clearly proved by the slow progress of history, that there is a real place and function for denominational bodies that express particular aspects of Christian truth, that bear testimony to special features of the many-sided faith of the church universal. But the denomination, with its partial truth and its limited outlook, must never make itself a substitute for the one true church of Jesus Christ, the undivided fellowship of the whole family of God. To make that substitution is the very essence of sectarianism. A "sect" is, as its name implies, a part cut off from the body, and yet claiming to be the body, claiming to have a monopoly of Divine truth and to be in a peculiar sense the "fold" of the true sheep. The sectarian tendency makes for exclusiveness and narrowness. It encourages bitter rivalry, and, especially perhaps in rural communities, division of forces and loss of efficiency. There is no place in this age of the world for the compartment scheme or for the sectarian spirit.

If denominational families are to be preserved, as they certainly should be, for the cultivation of intimate fellowship and for the emphasis of definite aspects of truth which other Christians tend to neglect, the denominational family should never be mistaken for the larger reality—the whole body of believers, which is the church. The moment we draw a narrow line about our beloved fellowship, and crystallize its ideals into fixed "notions" or rigid "practices" and "systems" and then call it the "church," we have done much to arrest the great spiritual movement of the ages and we have defeated the very purpose for which a denominational family exists. The goal of our devotion now, as in the apostolic age, should be "the perfecting of saints, the edifying of the body of Christ; till we all come, in the unity of the faith and the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ."—"In whom all the building, fitly framed together, groweth into a holy temple in the Lord in whom ye [the particular families] are built together on the habitation of God through the Spirit." (Eph. iv: 12-13 and ii: 21-22.)

R. M. JONES.

"SOME WORDS OF PRESIDENT WILSON ABOUT RELIGION."

"It is a very significant matter in my mind, that the Gospel came into the world to save the world as well as to save individual souls. There is one sense in which I have never had very much interest in the task of saving individual souls by merely advising them to run to cover. It has never seemed to me that the isolation of the human soul, its preservation from contamination such as the Middle Ages attempted, or any modern substitute for that, was graced with any dignity at all. If men cannot lift their fellowmen in the process of saving themselves, I do not see that it is very important that they should save themselves, because they reduce Christianity by that means to the essence of selfishness, and anything that is touched with selfishness is very far removed from the spirit of Christianity. Christianity came into the world to save the world as well as to save individual men, and individual men can afford in conscience to be saved only as a part of the process by which the world itself is regenerated. Do not go about, then, with the idea that you are picking out here and there a lost thing, but go about with the consciousness that you are setting afoot a process by which you will lift the whole level of the world and of modern life.

"The New Testament is the history of the life of Jesus Christ and the testimony of common men who rallied to His fellowship and who by their faith and preaching remade a world that was under thrall of the Roman army. This is the history of the triumph of the human spirit, in the persons of humble men. . . . Let no man suppose that progress can be divorced from religion or that there is any other platform for the ministers of reform than the platform written in the utterances of our Lord and Saviour."

LETTERS FROM FRANCE.

(Continued from page 652.)

When night came we were naturally tired; so tired that I can hardly remember who was there or what we did. All this time others were scouring the country side with automobiles to evacuate threatened villages, and they were often under shell fire. We had to load the trains with old people, women and children, decrepit, sick or dying; and as the platform was low the work of getting them into the carriage was very hard. Everyone was splendid and the only thought was to render service and help in every conceivable way. Of course at the station we had to deal with the very poorest—I mean those who had come away without horses and carts, for those who had these filled the roads leading away from the town and continued their sad journey on their own resources; so did many on foot, as I realized when we in our turn abandoned this post. In the evening our friend, Dr. B., who had been doing yeoman service in his ambulance, set out for A, and turned over to me his concern that the Smith College girls be taken care of and placed out of danger in time. As I had no authority over them, and their directress was in Paris and their only idea to stay till the last possible moment, I felt worried for once. Fortunately the next day, the Red Cross delegate for that district appeared and relieved me. They were, he said, to leave Fourth-day morning—a long time off, it seemed to me.

Our work continued on the same lines the next day, except that we carried one stove down to the station and kept things hot on it there, after cooking in the courtyard of the school. Then the townspeople began to go and our work doubled. Women came staggering down the platform with loads I couldn't carry (and I am stronger and better able to do such things than ever before); children were lost and lost soldiers began to turn up singly and in small bodies. Two came in Second-day night, having swum a river to get away from "Gerry"—dripping wet and demanding dry clothes: none, of course, were forthcoming. We worked until after dark, having requisitioned a barrack near the gare for permissionnaires. There we made coffee and chocolate and sheltered the évacués. The soldiers took it over at night, and while not turning our charges out, drank up our coffee and chocolate and filled the stoves with ashes and clinkers so that the next morning I had to turn the stoves upside down to clean them. I hope you will begin to realize how dirty we were—coal ashes, coffee, chocolate and condensed milk on our hands, faces and uniforms, all our personal luggage sent on to Paris by the agricultural caravan except knapsacks; and no time to wash. Fortunately we were busy and I don't believe I ever passed a holiday in my life that did me as much good as these ten days.

Third-day came the official order to evacuate the town and the British retreat—the French had taken over the line and resistance was stiffening—but now there were two streams of traffic. French men, horses, guns, camions, wagons, provisions and ammunition going up and the British coming back just as thick. Fortunately their ways diverged in the town and we were enabled to beat our retreat over roads practically unhampered by the British retirement. Most of the French were up before we left.

We worked very hard all day getting off the townspeople, including the nuns and their old and sick patients—a most difficult and trying job.

Among the last to bid us good-bye was the President of the local branch of the French Croix Rouge who had been prodigal of sympathy and encouragement. It was a hectic day. Finally we got the last train fed and wandered slowly back to the hotel, where I found I had been tolled off to accompany a big camion, loaded with Smith College stores and baggage, a twenty-four hour old baby, her mother, father and sister, all in charge of a Smith College social worker from N. Y. We were away before I had more than half eaten, in Jackson's Ford touring car to fetch them up the mountain to the camion. We lifted them out of bed and made a bed on the back seat of the Ford, where the woman and her husband sat or reclined, while the other three, including the baby, were in front; I walked. We had to leave the grandmother, uncle and aunt behind, but I believe they got away later. The woman was fine—so courageous, uncomplaining and grateful—we loaded her into a comfortable bed in the camion with her husband—just home en permission in time. Then we set off in a convoy of three—our White truck, the Smith College Unit in their jitney, and the Ford. As we went away we passed ghostly figures by the roadside, resting or trudging on with wheelbarrows or little bundles of clothing, while we thundered past comfortably seated and sure of getting away safely.

It was a beautiful moonlight night and as we drew further away the roads were almost deserted and on either side as calm and peaceful as if hell were not loose a few kilometres to the north. The barrage was over and the thunder of the guns came to us in single reports as we rolled comfortably over the almost perfect road. Once in a while we would shout back to our soldier-father "ca va?" and he always answered "ca va bien!"

With waits for the other cars we traveled for about an hour and a half and pulled into St. Just early enough to find people on the street to direct us to our baby's relatives—we borrowed a stretcher from a soldier camp and carried the mother safely to a bed.

Kenneth Cross, who had been sent on some days before with the horses, etc., had provided hotel accommodation for the ladies. Art (the driver) and I slept in the camion (whence many fleas).

On Fourth-day we got busy again. Jackson, who had arrived about 3:30 A. M., on account of the Red Cross, bought a stove, charcoal, kitchen utensils and from the supplies of food we brought, and bread the Maire gave us, we set up another kitchen on the roadside near the town, and had café au lait for the émigrés as they streamed in, and for the soldiers as they streamed out. We were near a cross-roads, which fortunately was not shelled, but the noise of the guns was increasing all the morning. About noon a French officer came down and ordered us to leave—which I for one did with great thankfulness, that so far we had been exposed to no great danger and were privileged to be of use.

Among the crowd that passed us this morning were Mme. Varlet and her daughter, who greeted me with smiles and good cheer: each of them managing a two-horse tram, loaded with their possessions. They had no man to help them, but were progressing carefully and with wonderful confidence and self-possession.

Before, I had met with many of our townfolk, who showed the most lively gratitude and confidence in us and seemed cheered and comforted by our presence, to such an extent that I could not think of the loss of our material work that has come, but only of the tremendous gain we have made in friendship and good-will among a people to whom we cannot even yet speak plainly. There is one thought ingrained in every one of us, and that is that we must go back to help them set their homes in order and begin life anew as soon as we can. If the people back of us in America give us half a chance, we can, when we do so, accomplish, I think, twice the good that we have in the past.

I succeeded in getting the girls started by upsetting the stove and collecting our kitchen utensils in the jitney. This time we took them all with us. After a lunch in the hotel we again set out as before, picked up our mother and baby, and started for the old cathedral town of ———. We got there and found problems three or four times as big as before. On the way we passed our agricultural équipes, still clinging tightly to their horses, our luggage and the one tractor brought off. After coming back from placing our charges in safety with the father's relatives, we found Doctor Calvert in the Place, seated on the tractor, covered with dust and sweat and surrounded by several hundred people, to whom he was telling the story of our escape from the battle. Here the Red Cross had sent some big officials to help us and we scoured the town for empty houses, finally finding one where we established headquarters. I slept the first night on some straw, with two blankets, in the dining-room.

The next morning I found the girls established in a railroad building, with four or five stoves going and cooking away for the refugees for dear life. Jackson took off all the Friends left with him the following day to a point nearer the line, where he had orders to report and help evacuate. I don't remember just what we did on our first day, but the refugees were established in empty passenger and freight coaches and fed there. I worked in the kitchen.

We found the town we were to help clear up entirely deserted, I mean this literally. There were perhaps half a dozen civilians left and the Red Cross was in possession of the hotel, which they were running for themselves. I set to the next morning, after the town had been shelled and we had all taken refuge in the wine cellar, down fifty steps and cut out of solid rock, where most of the hotel (it was full of Red Cross workers) slept. But I went back to bed, having helped fit up a camion as ambulance to carry the dead and wounded from the shelling—they were taken to a military hospital and I did not see them. As I said I set to the next morning and helped the store-keeper, Robert Davis, of Cape Cod, to get his stores in order and to break up chocolate, sausage, etc., for the canteen, which they were running at the station, fortunately on our way we had met Edmund West wandering around the country on a bicycle looking for his horses. He is the head of our agricultural department, and wanted to see them safe in a pasture he had rented not far from Paris. We explained he was on the wrong road and sent him back to Paris after I had bought his raincoat. It was wet and rainy so that this was a great comfort to me, for I could keep dry and begin to get some of the wet out of my clothes, which had been soaked at our last stopping-place. In the afternoon we had our orders reversed and after I had helped a little in preparing a hospital in the basement of the palace we retraced our steps and returned to where the Smith College Unit was working, having found Sid, Brown, Ernest L. Brown and our Garner truck and requisitioned them to return for our work.

Here we found reinforcements from Paris, a number of Friends who had set up a kitchen on wheels at the station for évacués. The French Red Cross fed the soldiers, the Smith College Unit fed the wounded, mostly the French, as they were sent out on the hospital trains. It was Easter morning, but there was no holiday for us. I turned to again in the kitchen and carried food out to trains for the wounded and to the freight shed where the évacués were lodged all day. I kept myself limber and spruced up by hard work, shifts of light hours, each which had been arranged in the Smith kitchen, was going all day and night, feeding wounded in the daytime, and soldiers all night, while the other kitchen supplemented by this, fed the évacués.

At night, owing to air raid scares, we had to remove all the évacués to schools in the town, where we gave them food, some condensed milk for babies and our blessing, and left them while we got a little rest; then we turned to again and repeated what we had done the day before in feeding and helping. One grand and blessed fact stands out about the second-day following. I had my first hot bath since last autumn, at a bath-house where everything was lovely and comfortable. On Fourth-day I decided to come up to Paris to the Executive Committee meeting, which lasted two days, and until ten o'clock each night. Yesterday, I spent loafing, shopping and writing the first part of this letter and tomorrow I start in to work in the Red Cross Office with Charles Evans, my address, however, being the same as before, and living at the Hotel Britannique for an indefinite period.

J. H. H.

PARABLES OF SAFED THE SAGE.

THE DOG AND THE LIMITED.

Now I rode on a Fast Express Train called the Limited. And we went through a Country where there were Many Farms. And the Train went like the Driving of Jehu.

And there was a Farmhouse that stood near unto the Track, but back, as it were, about the space of a Furlong. And in the Farmhouse dwelt a Farmer. And the Farmer had a Dog. And when the Train drew Nigh, the Dog started from the Farmhouse toward the Train. And he Barked Furiously, and he Ran Swiftly. And I marveled that he could run so Swiftly, and that at the same time he could Bark so furiously. But with all his barking he could not make so much Noise as the Train, neither with all his Running could he overtake it.

And the path that he made in his Running was a Great Parabolic Curve. For he started before the Train entered the Farm, running toward the Train, and going East, for the Train was toward the West. But as the Train ran on and stopped not, the Dog ran South, and when the Train was going By and not even Hesitating, he Curved so that he ran South-west and then West. And at the west side of the Farm he fell into a Ditch, and rolled over and over and got up, and shook himself, and stood for a moment and cursed the Train, and then Returned Home.

And a month thereafter I rode on the same Train, and behold, the Same Dog did all the Things that he had done before.

And three months thereafter I rode again on the Same Train, and the Same Dog was still Getting Experience in the Same Manner, but Learning Nothing Therefrom.

And I saw that he was even like unto some Men, who might be Braved in a Mortar with a Pestle, yet would not their Folly depart from them.

For even as that Dog watcheth daily for that Train, rising every morning and listening for it, and chasing it through the Farm, and Tumbling in the Ditch on the West Line of the Farm, so there are Men who Chase their Follies Continually, and learn Nothing from their Tumbles.

And what would the Dog have Done with the Train if he had Caught it?—From The Congregationalist.

HYMN.

As a bird in meadows fair
Or in lonely forest sings
Till it fills the summer air,
And the greenwood sweetly rings,
So my heart to Thee would raise,
O, my God, its song of praise.
That the gloom of night is o'er,
And I see the sun once more.

If Thou, Sun of Love, arise
All my heart with joy is stirred,
And to greet Thee, upward flies,
Gladsome as yon little bird,
Shine Thou in me clear and bright
Till I learn to praise Thee right,
Guide me in the narrow way,
Let me ne'er in darkness stray.

—From the German, 1580.

COMMENCEMENT AT CHRISTIANSBURG.

Down through the famous Shenandoah Valley to Roanoke, thence thirty miles southwest to Christiansburg, we went last week to attend the Commencement exercises of Christiansburg Industrial Institute.

The atmosphere was hot and humid when we left Philadelphia, but here on the crest of the Alleghamies, 2200 feet above sea level, where the waters flow on one side to the Atlantic and on the other to the Mississippi, the air was cool and bracing.

We received a warm welcome from Principal Long and his wife and were shown to the Board guest-room in Baily-Morris Hall, the big, cheerful building bearing the names of those two good friends of the School, Joshua L. Baily and Eliston P. Morris.

The first question asked by everyone was "When were you here before?" I pointed to attractive little Natalie Long, named for a member of the Board, and replied, "There is my calendar—as many years ago as she is years old." Natalie and the "farm babies"—two splendid little boys belonging to the capable school farmer, were the first objects of our inspection. The babies have grown finely so far, but in the minute quarters which they are forced to occupy they will soon have to be curtailed or beheaded for lack of space to grow more. A cottage for this family is a crying need.

Class Day exercises were then announced. The program, which had been prepared without their teachers' supervision, did credit to the twelve young people—six girls and six boys—who composed the graduating class. The usual history, prophecy, poem, will, and gift to the School were presented, but underneath the familiar ideas ran an undercurrent of seriousness usually absent from similar events among our more favored youth.

The poet was from Wabash, Indiana. A teacher here had discovered him in an orphanage and believing he showed promise sent him here, paying out of her own salary his first year's schooling. The poem lacked coherence, but showed high ideals struggling for expression.

In the class were two of Principal Long's children. Both are to go to Hampton this Autumn, the boy to study mechanics and "to act," as his father expressed it, "the Hampton training, discipline and ideas of life." Then if he decides to carry out his own purpose of being a physician, he may do so. The girl is to study nursing.

Another member of the class was a boy from Germantown, a protégé of Bethia Elder Whittaker.

A picture of Booker T. Washington was presented for the class by a boy whose father was a member of the first graduating class in 1891, and whose mother is a capable teacher in the primary department.

A tree planting followed, with appropriate address. After that we strolled to the base ball field to watch a game between Christiansburg and Bluefield Colored Institute. Bluefield is not an industrial school, so work on the farm had not prevented its stalwart team from training. Our boys looked smaller on the average and as we knew a late season of Spring planting had kept them from practice, we resigned ourselves to defeat. But the score stood eleven to one in our favor. "The harder our boys work the better ball they play," commented the wife of the Principal on the outcome. While we were sitting on the side-lines watching the crowd which displayed the same mysterious excitement and inexplicable aberration of baseball crowds everywhere, Principal Long expressed his regret that the debates between Bluefield and Christiansburg had to be given up because of the lack of the necessary $25 to pay the traveling expenses of the debating team. Just then there came along a man who had been in the School thirty-two years before. After leaving, he studied for the ministry in Richmond and was ordained in the Hill church near Christiansburg, the brick of which he had helped to burn. He is now pastor of a church of five hundred members in Morristoryn, N. J., where he is known as the "gardener pastor" because he has a fine garden of his own and teaches his parishioners to garden. He linked the past and present by pointing to the old "Mansion House," our school building, and saying, "My grandmother lived as a slave in that house, and my father was sold from her when he was three years old." When the grandmother herself was later sold to Richmond, her boy, now half grown, hearing one day that his master was going to Baltimore to buy goods, begged him to stop in Richmond and buy back his mother. The kind-hearted master did so and eventually restored her to her original mistress who repented having sold her faithful servant in a fit of anger.

At the Alumni and Old Scholars' meeting in the evening, three members of the Class of '91 were present. One was the mother of our domestic science teacher, who is a graduate of our School and of Cheyney.

The program was a varied one—talks by old scholars interspersed with songs. The main address was by the "gardener pastor" on the texts, "Neglect not the gift that is in thee," "Stir up the gift of God that is in thee"—a sound, practical exhortation to his race to cultivate the virtues in which he deemed it lacking.

Then a Negro of the old fashioned type arose and said that he had attended the School for one session just after the war and that here he had learned his letters and got as far as the Third Reader. As he recited a poem taught him then and said that while he had "missed the opportunity to learn," he had not "missed the opportunity to know God," the mystical illumination of his face recalled "Uncle Tom" and revealed the secret of the charm of such strong, simple and truly pious souls.

The Alumni on this occasion presented $50 to the School. The thrift and self-denial represented by this gift were deeply appreciated by the officers of the School.

The unique event of this Commencement Week occurred on Fourth-day, the 15th. This was the dedication of the Christiansburg Colored Hospital. A hospital to accommodate about twenty patients has been built with funds, nearly one-third of which was contributed by the white people of Christiansburg and the remainder by Philadelphia Friends. Dr. Showalter, a progressive white physician of Christiansburg, in a conversation with Principal Long, initiated the movement for such a hospital.

The objects of this institution are:

First, to have a place in Southwest Virginia where colored patients may come for nursing or operations.

Second, to furnish an opportunity to give training in nursing to a number of girls in attendance at Christiansburg Industrial Institute.

Third, to furnish to the community a trained nurse who shall be the Superintendent of the hospital and combine with that office the duties of a community visitor to teach sanitation, cleanliness and care of health to the colored people in their homes. The Staff will be entirely of white physicians, there being no colored doctors in the region.

A Board of twelve managers has been organized, consisting of two from the Board of Managers of the Friends' Freedmen's Association, two colored men—Principal Long and a highly respected business man in the community—and eight leading white citizens of Christiansburg.

This "Christiansburg Experiment" is a venture in race co-operation and is believed to be unique in the annals of the South. To Principal Long, Henry Scattergood and Morris Leeds belong the credit of having enlisted the active interest of the townspeople.

In dedicating the hospital the representative of the Board of Managers of the Friends' Freedmen's Association said in closing:

"To the cause of health, physical, moral and spiritual, and to inter-racial co-operation in the spirit and love of Christ, I, on behalf of the Board in charge of Christiansburg Industrial Institute, dedicate the Christiansburg Colored Hospital. To you, Mr. Roop, representing its Board of Managers, I present this institution for the colored people of Southwest Virginia, using as a symbol this key which is to open for you an enviable opportunity for Christian service and good-will."

To this reply was made:

"On behalf of the Board of Managers, as well as of this struggling and progressive race of patriotic people, we accept this building which is and ever shall be a lasting and rewarding monument to all who have contributed thereto. . . . The hospital was then inspected. Natalie Kimber and Amy Albertson had given much time and thought to its furnishing.

In the afternoon, a farmers' conference was held. Addresses were made on food conservation and chicken and vegetable raising by professors from the State Agricultural College. Our own farm of 186 acres looked well cultivated. Arthur Richie and Henry Comfort are uniting in their co-operation with our excellent farmer to produce the best results.

The next morning we called upon Ada A. Schaeffer, the wife of Charles S. Schaeffer, who founded the School in 1866. Her life has been saddened by many afflictions, and one of her chief pleasures is to talk with those who are interested in the School.

The Commencement Exercises were at two o'clock. The boys were dressed in their grey uniforms; the girls in the simplest of white cotton gowns, all exactly alike, and made by themselves in the sewing-room of the School. A salutatory, two essays and a valedictory were read. These were simple, direct and unpretentious in subject, matter and delivery. The address to the class was made by Roscoe C. Simmons, of Kentucky, a nephew of Booker T. Washington. His humor and poetic flights of fancy were enjoyed by his audience. The singing of Negro melodies was a pleasing feature of the occasion.

Exhibits of handwork by pupils filled two large rooms. Everything seemed well done.

Our impressions of the School were satisfactory. Hard work with no straining after effect marked all the activities. The quiet, industrious demeanor of the students, the lack of affectation or forwardness, the universal good order and cleanliness seemed to reflect the characteristics which are the ideals of Friends' schools everywhere. These conditions are in largest measure due to the able, conscientious, unassuming Principal and his true helpmate, who constantly sink themselves in their zeal for the welfare of their race.

Our Principal as well as some of his teachers are seriously overworked because there is need of more and better paid teachers than our funds supply. There are 256 pupils in the School. Let us not forget that we are responsible for our share in the making of a people who are to be more and more a factor for good or ill in the fate of our common country.

AGNES L. TIERNEY.

WAS SUBJECT UNTO THEM.

"The measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ."

And yet the daily task is sorely too,

And he who serves the Highest will not spurn

The humbler service, nor unloving turn

From claims of human kinship. No less true

A mastery of our wills is that which through

Apprenticeship to other wills we learn,

Nor servile, yet submissive to discern

God's bidding when a fowler bids to do.

So through those silent unrecorded years

The matchless life grew slowly into power,

Brooding its mystery of hopes and fears

And moving ever forward toward the hour

When He who first had served at Nazareth

Life's Lord became, obedient unto Death.

—SARAH J. DAY, in "Christ in the Poetry of To-day."

GOD IS WORKING.

In traveling under religious concern, and associating therein among people, one becomes assured, that the one condition needful for our Heavenly Father to work in the hearts and lives of people, is the willingness to let him work.

Many, many times do we become convinced that He is even awaiting and watching the opportunity to occupy His appointed and rightful place, His temple, the hearts of mankind.

Numerous incidents convince that He is indeed no respecter of persons, and thanksgiving arises for this. He can lead and guide, He will and He does.

In the face of these proven facts, it leads one, and should lead all, to seek to respond to Him, and to His Spirit's presentation. "Behold I stand at the door and knock, if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him and sup with him and he with Me." "He came unto His own and his own received him not," is too true, is it not, many times, but that "whosoever will," do come is touchingly true also.

As we are alive to such things, we are likely to meet with such in others, for out of the fulness of the heart confession is made.

In a providential though casual acquaintance with a stranger, who became a friend in need, the fact developed that he was a fireman on railroad locomotives, and a man of religious concern. In conversation, asking in regard to the business, etc., of the men, he informed that there were praying engineers on the line of railroad where he worked. He is what is known as a substitute, firing on different locomotives, as he is needed. On getting upon the one where his work was to be on one occasion, he noticed the engineer sitting in his seat with bowed head; he did not disturb him, but went about his own work of getting ready for the run of possibly over one hundred miles, there being twenty minutes time before starting.

After a short period the engineer got off his seat to attend to his duties, remarking he never started out on a trip without seeking a time of access with his Heavenly Father, whereupon the fireman replied, he would like always to run with that kind of a man. He said there were praying engineers on the railroad. At another time, on boarding the locomotive on which he was to work, he discovered a profane companion for the trip. On observing that his proposed fireman did not appear to use profanity, the engineer asked him how long he had been firing, and when told, replied he did not see how he could keep from swearing; the fireman told him, he did not get paid anything for that, and he wanted to live in such a way that he would be prepared for the end of life when it came.

His companion, who had been so profane, replied he would like to have such a man to fire for him all the time.

The hidden workings of the spirit of our Heavenly Father, who can tell! and do we at all times emphasize it by our demeanor!

Having rather felt objections to traveling by rail at night, seeming rather more dangerous, yet on one occasion it seemed best to do so, and thankful for the safe trip that was made, the query presented, was there a servant of the Lord at the throttle, a praying man with a sooty face perhaps?

People sometimes seem to think there is no religion among motormen and conductors. They have not touched the spring that revealed it. Yes there are God-fearing men among them and in many and in various unlooked for places, and how many? The Truth of God and primitive Christianity is not scarce because there is no Teacher, no, no, by no means, but the scarcity is in the willing pupils.

New incidents, circumstances, and conditions assure us of this again and again, as we pass along the way. Yes, God does work, and He is awaiting to, when we will only let Him.

For those in whom He is seeking to find a true resting place, or in whom He has already found it in some measure, how needful it is for those to evidence and witness, even if it be unconsciously to all men, the Father's way, the true baptism in which His Kingdom does come and His will is done.

A man approaching fourscore and ten casually made the remark in conversation, "we do not attend to what we know."

A blacksmith, afflicted with cancer for fifteen years, passed through various operations, which for a time seemed successful, but finally he was attacked in a way that relief was not possible; he had been a kind man and concerned in life, though he was not a member of a religious society, having left one he was not satisfied with. In his afflicted suffering condition he felt concerned for those who came to see him and counselled them to a closer walk with God, and the heavenly atmosphere of his room, where anybody and everybody could enter at will, which seemed to be his desire, was a foretaste of the precious reward that undoubtedly awaited him, and his couch seemed encompassed by those he had befriended and counselled. "Let God work;" "God will work;" yes, He is at work. Is He working in me as he ought, am I a living witness for Him?

The cream of milk rises to the top, righteousness is the cream of life and keeps down the thinner, less helpful part. The apostle says, "I keep my body under," the spirit is to be atop.

C. C.

AN OREGON TRAIL.

(Continued from page 655.)

At 8.30 the presiding Commissioner announced that the conference must conclude. Apparently the Indians could have kept on till midnight with their speeches. A brief summary of a picturesque and somewhat dramatic occasion must suffice in these notes. The first speaker, with his illustrations of sticks and a bundle of sticks and his apparent bursts of eloquence, suggested the reported Conference of William Penn and his associates with the Delawares. The Indian traditions of a deliberative assembly are well preserved, nor are women excluded from an active part. The argument for the re-establishment of the dance proceeded about as follows: It was a dance for the Indians alone. The white man's way "of dancing with another man's wife" would not be tolerated. The illustrations of what the Indian sees in the white man's dance was not flattering to our boasted advancement. The desire for the dance did not mean a revival of all the practices of their primitive life. They did not intend to teach it to their children. Its revival was intended to meet the need of amusement in the Winter time, when they had no work. They were encouraged to think it right by the totem pole and the potlach at Tulalip. As to the tamanamus and the song which a diseased person can sing under its influence the white man did not understand. As the conference proceeded this latter point became more and more clearly disclosed. The Indians themselves must have seen a plain image of the "medicine man" in the picture they drew. Three persons had recently been cured by the "song." Two of these gave evidence that did not in any degree advance the contention of the harmlessness of the dance. The Catholic Commissioner made a very plain statement in response, in which the veiled effort to revive the evils of the past was put so that the Indians could not fail to understand. The Conference over, it was interesting to observe how the Indians accepted an apparent failure on their part to establish a case. They were not surly at all. In the morning, two of them took the Commissioners in their Ford for a call, and finally transported us all to the railroad station. Dr. Buchanan had left us at 10.30 the night before in order to be at his post in the hospital at 7.30 A. M. It meant a five-hours' ride in the darkness and chill of the night to serve at the post of physician, for which he would receive no other recognition than the approval of his own sense of privilege and service. We turned from the Indians with a renewed vision of how much of this noble devotion has been bestowed upon them.

While in Portland, we had a first-hand touch with our home city through Dallas J. Sidwell, who represents the Provident Life and Trust Company. He called a meeting of the "Friendly Circle" for the evening of our Friends' day. Some twenty-five came together at the beautiful home of the hospitable Townsends. Such familiar names as Matlack and Walton and Coffin gave us undoubted home associations, while Jasper C. McGrew brought back the Westtown of the seventies. This group of Friendly people meet once a month during the Winter in private homes. In the main they are not connected with either of the "Friends' Churches" in Portland. Some of them are active in Presbyterian or Congregational Churches, but by this independent association in a Friendly Circle they express a visible measure of loyalty for what they understand Quakerism to be. In addition to most pleasant social intercourse the two Philadelphia Friends had an opportunity to speak to the group. A somewhat late hour of adjournment left the feeling that the circle had by no means belied its name to us.

As we look at our maps in Philadelphia, the comparative size of Eastern and Western States rarely impresses us. We were told in Portland that Oregon is double the size of Pennsylvania, with only the population of a city like Los Angeles. In Washington a good authority said these figures were about correct for that State, too. This limited population in so great an area may in part account for a seemingly spendthrift attitude toward certain natural resources. Lumber especially seems to the traveler to be wantonly wasted. Much that would make valuable by-products in the East is burned, while the banks of streams and lakes are sorely littered with escaped logs. With all natural opportunities rightly developed and conserved, what a great population these States could maintain! The three most important cities of this great Northwest domain, Seattle, Portland and Tacoma, named here in order of size, have very notable marks of stability and active business enterprise. This is especially stimulated now by ship-building on Puget Sound (perhaps we saw two hundred ships just built or under construction), but the activity nowhere seems of the "boom" order. It partakes of the solidity of natural and necessary development. The people have a large degree of enthusiasm and extol their climate as above all else desirable. The whole section is evidently one of very frequent rains during the Winter months, although the average annual rainfall is less than in Philadelphia. The common joke in directing one to a place in Portland is to tell them "to walk straight along till they meet the second shower," and they will be there.

It was not intentional to omit from this record, two most interesting visits in Oregon, the first of these was to the Cushman school, near Tacoma. There were three of us in the party of inspection, William H. Ketcham, a member of the Board of Indian Commissioners and head of the Missionary work of the Catholics amongst the Indians in the U. S., having joined us. Through him we had the entre to more than one line of work not generally open to outside visitation. Superintendent Ernest Hammond not only has the responsibility of the School, but also of the Indians on four reservations with three day-schools. Such positions involve a variety of capacity altogether beyond the ordinary. We had occasion here and at our next stopping-place to observe how fortunate the government is in securing superintendents of such a high type. The emoluments are so modest and the sacrifices so great, that nothing but the largest philanthropy could hold them in their positions. An Indian reservation is said to be a portion of land entirely surrounded by thieves. To protect the Indians from these demands much more than courage,—statesmanship of a high order is constantly necessary.

The Cushman School has about three hundred pupils. Like Chemawa it is a non-reservation school, which means it can draw pupils from an unrestricted territory. So in both these schools we saw Esquimaux children. In their work in the shops as in the class-room we could see that behind their shy manner they are very intelligent, particularly in mechanical lines. In their restricted home environment necessity has been the mother of invention until they actually have an inventive heredity. Superintendent Hammond belongs to that class of educators who express themselves by saying "school is actually life, not a mere preparation for life." Normal activity and association, in this view, are regarded as educative and used to that end. Thus we saw the boys in their Literary Society, with two of their number presiding. The adroit and courteous way in which they side-tracked their own program and put their visitors in action indicated a resourcefulness that we had not expected. The Cushman School has one of the best equipments for manual training (and in passing one of the best directors of industries) we have seen. The Superintendent, who has not been long at his present post, intends to emphasize this line of work.

The two reservations we wished to visit were about forty miles from the School, but in opposite directions. An automobile—a "Silent Knight," with a most competent driver, was put at our disposal and we made an early start on our second day at the School for the Muckleshoet Reservation. Our course was through the Puyallup Valley, rich in dairy farms and productive gardens of the Japanese. This was the site aforesaid of the Puyallup Reservation, but these Indians have been absorbed in citizenship. The five residences of three of them were pointed out. One is president of the local school board and a drinking fountain in the town was a gift from him. He was said to be worth upwards of $200,000. Another, with a taste for land-scape gardening, has developed quite a park about his attractive-looking residence. Our driver recognized his auto on the road ahead of us and overtaking it we halted and had some welcome conversation. In connection with "competent Indians" we were told of the Yakima Reservation in Washington, where sheep-raising on a large scale has brought prosperity to most of the Indians. In the town fifteen of them have automobiles, and the president of the bank is a "full-blood." These instances seem to indicate that the methods of the government have not been fruitless.

J. H. B.

(To be concluded.)

CHILDREN'S CORNER.

THE YOUNG ICELANDER.—The following was selected for our column by our friend William C. Allen, who has recently returned from Honolulu. We are grateful that even in a far-away land our beloved friend has remembered our Children's Corner.

"This is my own, my native land," every honest man says, with laudable pride in his heart; but the young Icelander is probably the proudest of living patriots. Why? Because his country is Iceland—and where are there such wonderful geysers, such great fountains of hot sulphur, such a magnificent aurora borealis? In the Winter when night comes on the people of other countries sit in darkness; the Icelander has only to glance at the sky to see the most splendid crimson and scarlet lights playing over his land and making the gloom beautiful.

"You speak of the dark nights of Winter and of driving away the gloom by electric light. Heaven lights our nights!" said an Icelandic boy after he had heard descriptions of the appearance of the city streets at night in the United States.

And where are there such terrible snow-capped volcanoes as in Iceland, such deep caves and such contorted rocks? Have you never heard of Thingvellir, near the great crags of Nikolasa Gja, where a man six feet tall appears like an ant in size among those giant boulders?

And those are not all real stones, the old men will tell you at the Winter fireside. Some of those rocks have legs and arms and great chests; they are the dwelling places of powerful beings called trolls, who have lived in Iceland since the old pagan times. The trolls never became Christians, and they will have no friendship with the Lutheran Icelanders. On Christmas Eve you may see them roving about from sunset to midnight, but at the first peep of dawn they turn again into rocks.

The Icelanders claim much of the credit for the landing of the Greenlanders—of Norwegian race, like the Icelanders—at Vinland. They insist that they discovered America. It would be hard to say of what the Icelanders are not proud.

Iceland wool and Iceland sheep are well-known to commerce, and the Iceland shepherd is very proud of his sheep. There are many well-kept farms in Iceland, although of course the methods of farming in a country where the sun seldom shines long enough to ripen wheat are not like ours.

"I should rather die than drink goat's milk," said a young American on one occasion, when he saw his hostess scalding the milk.

She replied that the children who drank goat's milk were very healthy, and that he must have come from a very poor country if goat's milk was unknown there. "How can the babies thrive?" she asked him.

The Icelanders number about eighty-five thousand; they are under the mild rule of the King of Denmark, yet they are never satisfied with the condition of things. Lately they made a fight for a national flag, and partly succeeded. They talk much of complete independence.

Formerly the Icelandic students attended the University of Copenhagen; but now the country has a university of its own. The Icelander is proud of the fact that each head of a family is learned enough to hold a school in his own house.

Thorvaldsen, the sculptor, son of an Icelander, was born in 1770. He went to school at Copenhagen, and, falling in love with his art, he went to Rome. The King of Denmark encouraged him in every way. When Thorvaldsen was ready to return to Denmark, King Christian VII sent a frigate to convey him and his works to his adopted land. Icelanders name him as the greatest of all sculptors, and, although the classic influence is very apparent in all his works, he has great distinction of his own.

In the majestic palace called "Charlottenborg" in Copenhagen, which is now an Academy of Art, the King of Denmark gave Thorvaldsen a home. In the garden, near the rooms the sculptor occupied, is a tombstone bearing an inscription in honor of his dog:

(Translation)
Here rests the remains of JORDANO

An example of loyalty. He was born in Rome in the second year of the reign of Pius VI. He died at Copenhagen in the remarkable year when a pound of sugar cost XLIII Skilling (forty-three cents).

Both in Iceland and in Denmark dogs are much honored. But, even more than his dog, the Icelder loves his pony. A friend of mine read the famous description of the chariot race to an old Icelder, carefully translating it into Danish, which the Icelder understood.

"Fine!" said the man. "They knew the Icelandic horses in Rome; the Arabs have been known to prefer them to their own!"

The young Icelder loves Winter sport in moderation, but he is rather indolent in the Summer. He shoots well, for his dinner often depends on the bird he brings down; there is good fishing, and he profits by it—cod, salmon and char fill the rivers and lakes. Although he has never seen an automobile, a baseball game or a railway, he is the most contented boy on earth. He leads the simple life, and our ordinary necessities are his luxuries. Nothing can shake his confidence in the belief that his race is the noblest in the world. He says, "I am an Icelandic citizen," with all the pride of an ancient Roman.—From The Youth's Companion.

NEWS ITEMS.

THE "C. O." SITUATION.—A small group of Friends, Mennonites, etc., have for some weeks past carried in their minds an unannounced developing plan of the War Department, intended as a final solution of the complicated "C. O." situation.

There have been many serious difficulties to overcome, and we will not, in fact should not, consider them here, for it is a time to exercise a judicial silence concerning a number of subjects which might give entertainment as well as enlightenment. We were advised to keep silent until certain events occurred, and we have obeyed. In brief, the plan to be adopted is as follows, and here let us say that we have reason to be very thankful that such thoughtful, careful consideration has been accorded by certain men of influence in Washington, and that Secretary Baker has finally sanctioned the scheme.

Drafted men who have claimed conscientious objection to military service, and who have been found to be sincere in refusing to accept non-combatant military service under President Wilson's rulings of Third Month 20, 1918, are to be sent to Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, and placed in detention barracks; here they are to be examined by a special board of inquiry, composed of Major Richard P. Stoddard, of the Judge Advocate General's office, Chairman of the Board; Julian W. Maek of Chicago, a Federal Judge, and Dean H. F. Stone, of the Columbia University Law School, New York City, men of broad understanding.

If found to be consistent in their scruples and if their conduct has been satisfactory, etc., they are to be furloughed to engage in farming or in Reconstruction work abroad under our Friends' Unit. We are not in a position at this date to state positively just how the turn over to active constructive service is to be effected; we do know, however, that the offer to the Department of War, of our Commission, composed of members of different religious sects, who agree to act without compensation from the Government, in the capacity of guardians of the "C. O.'s" who may be turned over to it, has been favorably considered, and this Commission is prepared to act.

It is understood that these men under consideration by the above provision are by no means discharged from their responsibilities under the Selective Service Act, and permission is given to continue in the work suggested only so long as the men are reported by "disinterested observers" to be working to the best of their ability. Money earned by these men in excess of a private's pay and subsistence is to go to the Red Cross.

At first thought, the Fort Leavenworth detention sounds harsh—but we are not in a mood to criticize. May we hope that a fairly speedy action on the part of the War Department will result, and that a very considerable number of strong, active men, the most of whom are enduring enforced idleness, may give evidence to any persons who may have criticized them, that they are eager to engage in constructive work to help in humanity's needs any way their consciences will allow them.

Camps Dix, Meade and Lee have been recently visited by the Yearly Meeting Secretary. We will not comment on these journeyings here, except to state how refreshing it has been to note the appreciation of the Chief Librarian at Camp Dix in the work of our "C. O." members located there, who, with a few other objects, have to the satisfaction of those in authority handled over 20,000 books during the past few months.

The new draft regulations which require young men who have attained their majority during the past year to register on the 5th inst., will, from present indications (our information is not quite complete), affect about thirty of our members.

These men will be subject to the Selective Service regulations, just the same as their older brothers who registered and answered the questionnaire, etc., months ago. Letters of information as to their duties have been mailed to those known to be affected.

WM. B. HARVEY.

SIXTH MONTH 3, 1918.

REPORT OF THE TREASURER OF THE AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE, FOR WEEK ENDING SIXTH MONTH 1, 1918.

Received from 18 Meetings	$5,051.72
Received from 32 Individuals	3,238.13
Received for Armenian and Syrian Relief	35.00

$8,924.85

CHARLES F. JENKINS,
Treasurer.

[We have failed to receive The Friend (London) for almost a month, but just as we go to press, come two numbers, the most recent being for Fifth Month 10th. The following items are taken hastily from it.—Eds.]

LONDON YEARLY MEETING, celebrated, on the 22nd ult., the two hundred and fiftieth consecutive assembling of that body. The following was the proposed program. There has not been time yet for us to have had reports of the meeting, but we hope to reproduce some of the papers, at least in part. The principal papers embraced the following periods: William C. Braithwaite (1668-1725); A. Neave Brayshaw (1725-1825); Edward Gribb (1825-1918); Mary Jane Godlee (Women's Yearly Meeting).

The total membership of London Yearly Meeting by this year's census is 20,522. There are 316 "stated" meetings and 65 "allowed" meetings.

A FULL share of time was given to the interests of the C. O.'s at a late session of the London Meeting for Sufferings. Referring to the substitutes for imprisoned C. O.'s, Emily Smith, speaking for women Friends, said she did not urge anyone to join, and only asked for sympathy. Their desire was to make their offer in that spirit which can be accepted by Him who said, "I was in prison and ye came unto Me." Many protected by sex or personal position welcomed the opportunity of witnessing for peace, and of taking their place side by side with the men who are suffering in the battle for spiritual liberty. As to the scheme being quixotic or unreal, it was not the result of the appeal with which we have to be concerned, but the spirit in which it is made. The action was founded on an historic precedent, when in 1659 over 160 Friends went to Westminster Hall, offering to take the place of Friends in prison.

Several Friends expressed sympathy with the spirit and aims of the Friends who had spoken, but felt that it would be more difficult if the Meeting was definitely asked to approve. No minute was made on the subject.

SOME of our readers have followed with profit Professor Peake's lectures as reported in part at various times in THE FRIEND. Though not with Friends in the general question of war, he has placed Friends under an obligation by his plea for the C. O. which appeared under the title "Who is Offended and I Burn Not?" in the Primitive Methodist Leader.

He discusses four main counts against C. O.'s: (1) that they decline one of the fundamental duties of the citizen; (2) that they ought, in any case, to do "something to help their country;" (3) that it is base to accept all the privileges of citizenship and refuse its primary obligations, and (4) the objection to their being "left in safety at home while others have to endure all the risks and horrors of war." Each of these objections to the C. O.'s course he meets effectively and with sympathy; proceeding subsequently to a positive exposition of the religious position of the C. O., and also of the legal aspect; and finally discussing what should now be done to meet the demands of justice, liberty and reason. The crux of the Professor's position may be gathered from his sentence: "I dare not use the language about the pacifists that many Christians permit themselves to use, because I cannot shut my eyes to the possibility that Jesus Himself may have been a pacifist."

DUBLIN YEARLY MEETING met on the first of last month. The meeting of Ministry and Oversight, which is open to all Friends, was attended by about one hundred; four Friends were present as representatives from London.

The question of "The Service of the Society of Friends for Ireland at This Time," was early brought to the attention of the Yearly Meeting. It gained a sympathetic hearing; the following illustrates the latitude of expression:—

William Thompson doubted if any good would arise from any public action of the Society of Friends in Ireland at present. We only numbered about one in two thousand in a diminished population; in England the proportion was even smaller, being about one in two thousand four hundred. J. Ernest Grubb said we should not cut ourselves off from our fellow-countrymen; the logical result of such action would be monasticism. Friends made a profound impression by standing to their principles during the Irish Rebellion in 1798. Many outside our Society were opposed to all war. Edward Glynn described conscription as a direct attack upon conscience. James H. Webb considered Quakerism the highest exposition of Christianity to the world. He was a great believer in talking to the people he met in railway carriages, and thought that many were Quakers without knowing it. Helen M. Sturge thought Friends in Ireland had a great advantage over those in England in that the great mass of the Irish people were one with them in opposing conscription. Friends should endeavor to spiritualize this opposition, not being discouraged by smallness of numbers. S. Edith Williams did not think Friends could make any public pronouncement on the Peace question. Many Friends had money in War Loans or were interested in factories which in one way or another were contributing to the prosecution of the war. A Warburton Davidson said it was difficult to discuss world questions for five minutes without being inconsistent. It was difficult even to know how to pray about the war. Christ came in unfamiliar ways. A Manchester gentleman told him the other day that he was following the light as far as he was able to see it. That was better than fighting for peace in the spirit of war.

A member said he wanted to remind Friends that they belonged, not only to the Society of Friends, but to the Religious Society of Friends. Sin separated us from God. Social work was excellent, but Friends' work should be religious work in whatever sphere we might find our vocation. The subject of sin had been much neglected in our meetings.

The subject of combining the four Friends' schools in Ireland in one school at Dublin was brought up by the report of a large committee which had worked over the problem during the year and had held many meetings. Two hundred and twenty-nine pupils attended the past year at these four schools, of whom one hundred and four were Friends or closely affiliated with Friends.

The matter of consolidation was left undecided. The Quarterly Meetings to which the schools belong were to act as the final judges.

Up to Fifth Month 1st the number of C. O.'s in England who have resisted the Military Service Acts was 5,369, of whom 4,807 have been court-martialed. Of the latter 3,581 have been court-martialed once, 605 twice, 474 three times, 140 four times, 7 five times. Three thousand and thirty two were working under the H. O. S.

The Friends are proving their faith by their works in Reconstruction in France. Within the last few weeks a famous physician and a high army officer, both back from France, have testified to the wisdom, courage and devotion of the Friends' Reconstruction Unit. Some of its work—at least on its physical side—has been wiped out by the German drive, but such catastrophes only spur brave hearts to fresh efforts.—From the New World.

The following may not be news to some, but it will be interesting and encouraging information to many.

The group of Friends at Syracuse, New York, announce that the time of their meeting for worship has been changed to 11 A. M. These meetings are held regularly, during the school year, at the home of Professor Robert Tattall, 101 Clarke Street. The correspondent, Charles H. Carter, 866 Ostron Avenue, will appreciate receiving names and addresses of any Friends in Syracuse. Various branches of Friends are represented in this group and it is hoped that some organized effort may grow out of their informal gatherings. It was under their direction that Friends' Reconstruction work was recently presented at Syracuse University.—Exchange.

A FRIEND from Poughkeepsie, N. Y., writes that during the past Winter Union Meetings, in which Friends have joined with four of the largest congregations in the city, have been held each First-day evening. The other four have been Presbyterian, Congregational, Dutch Reformed and Episcopal. At a recent meeting these congregations were, so to speak, guests of the Friends, when more than one hundred and fifty were turned away from lack of even standing room.

How far the ideals of Friends as to what is the foundation for congregational worship prevailed in these meetings, we are not advised, but we are confident that the wish was uppermost with all to find a common ground whereon the five sects represented at the meetings could acceptably worship together.

This tribute to the worth of the Quaker classic, "The Friends' Library" awakened a cordial response when we saw it in the columns of an Exchange a few weeks ago.

The "Friends' Library" is a set of fourteen volumes which have in most places lain under the dust too long. Most meetings have these books already and there is a mine of rich material in them if our young Friends would take time to work for it. These Friends in their ministries and their accurate accounts of their goings and doings fill in much local history sometimes especially in the older meetings.

Here at New Garden we should probably begin with Abel Thomas and his experiences in North Carolina. I am sure that one will soon find what will best suit their study group.—JULIA S. WHITE.

NOTICES.

NEW ENGLAND YEARLY MEETING of Friends held at Westley, R. I., begins on Seventh-day, the eighth of this month. The Meeting of Ministers and Elders is to be at 11 A. M.

JOB S. GIDLEY.

NORMAN PENNEY writes that on pages 49, etc., of the last issue of the Journal of Friends' Historical Society will be found the first of several articles on "The Life and Letters of Jean de Marsillac." He says: "This French Friend spent some years in America towards the end of the eighteenth century and left for France finally, I believe, in 1806. I am very wishful to obtain all information I can respecting him while on your side of the water. Could you refer to this article in THE FRIEND and request that any information in the possession of Friends be sent to me? Possibly some Friend might be found who would obtain access to the minutes of Philadelphia meetings. In 'Quaker Biographies,' Vol. 3, Philadelphia, 1909, there is a reference to Marsillac, from which it appears that when he left America he was out of favor with Friends, and I am wishful to know, if possible, the reasons for this.—NORMAN PENNEY."

MEETINGS from Sixth Month 9th to Sixth Month 15th:—
Haddonfield and Salem Quarterly Meeting, at Moorestown, Fifth-day, Sixth Month 13th, at 2 P. M.
Burlington Monthly Meeting, Fifth-day, Sixth Month 13th, at 10:30 A. M.

WOOLMAN SCHOOL

A Friends' School for Social and Religious Education.

Six Weeks Summer Term:

Seventh Month 1—Eighth Month 10, 1918.

Courses in Hebrew Prophecy, Teaching of Jesus, History of Friends in the Nineteenth Century, Social Service, First-day School Teaching for Children and Adolescents, The Bible in the Schools, and Internationalism.

Send for Circular.

ELBERT RUSSELL, Director,
WOOLMAN SCHOOL,
SWARTHMORE, PA.

W. J. MacWatters

Let Me
Help You

In Selecting Your

RUGS AND CARPETS

Domestic -- -- Oriental

ALL WEAVES

The Home of Bundhar Wilton

"DURABLE AS IRON"

HARDWICK & MAGEE CO.

1220 Market Street

GLASLYN-CHATHAM

PARK PLACE

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

A Family House of Established Reputation.
Open Throughout the Year.

NATHAN L. JONES.

POCONO MANOR INN

POCONO MANOR, PA.

SPRINGTIME in the Pocono Mountains is ever a delight to those who admire and study nature. The Birds and Flowers are numerous and varied, and the Trout Fishing in the Swiftwater is wonderful.

J. W. HURLEY, Manager
(Pocono Summit Station, D. L. & W. R. R.)

"FRIENDS AND THE INDIANS"

FOR SALE AT $1.50 BY

FRIENDS' BOOK STORE
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

RESIDENCE: 254 S. 41st St. BELL 'PHONE: Boring 2084X

WILLIAM OAKES

Plumbing and Heating Contractor

ALSO LEAD BURNING

260 SOUTH TENTH STREET

PHILADELPHIA

BELL 'PHONE: Witors 3696.

The stamp of quality on Plumbing Fixtures

The Hajoca trademark represents an experience of sixty years in making sanitary plumbing fixtures. It stands for a reputation earned by ever-increasing excellence of the product. It assures you of health-protecting designs, and guarantees Hajoca quality.

Come and see the advanced designs of Hajoca Plumbing Fixtures. Our showrooms are within easy reach of City Hall. Write for Hajoca Book, free.

HAINES, JONES
& CADBURY CO.
1130-1144 Ridge Ave.

(at 12th and Spring Garden Sts.)

W. B. WEAVER UNDERTAKER and EMBALMER

550-552 N. 5TH ST., PHILA., PA.

Special Attention Given to Funerals
In and out of the City. Also Chapel
Accommodations for Funerals.

BELL 'PHONE : ESTABLISHED 1880

To enjoy good health and a sound digestion use
PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT BREAD

made from the entire wheat grain ground on a stone mill. A perfect food and natural regulator. Sold by all good grocers in Philadelphia.

Write for particulars to

PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT CO.
10th & Susquehanna Aves. PHILADELPHIA, PA.

WALL PAPERS—All Grades

Cutlun of Friends Specially Selected

FRANK C. BUEHL

Successor to S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON

902 SPRING GARDEN ST. - PHILADELPHIA

Store open until 10.30 A. M. Any other time by appointment only Opposite Spring Garden Station, Phila., and Reading R.R.

ESTABLISHED 1849. BELL 'PHONE.

AN ATTRACTIVE OPPORTUNITY FOR A real service of an enjoyable character at University House for the summer months in return for room and board. A young man is needed to give his weekday evenings from 7.30 to 9.30 taking charge of children's playground.

H. I. DUNCAN,
2001 Lombard Street,

WE don't maintain two shifts here, but we have been known to work 36 hours at a stretch to get hurry-up jobs through on time. We do work night and day when we have to.

THE HOLMES PRESS

J. Linton Engle, Pres. 1336 Cherry Street, Phila.

JOSEPH G. FOGG FUNERAL DIRECTOR and EMBALMER

S. W. Cor. Sixteenth and Race Streets

Special attention given to Friends' Funerals

Bell 'Phone : Spruce 1646

The Track of the Storm

Tales of the Marne, the Meuse, and the Aube, by Margaret B. Crook, B. A. These are inspired by incidents in the Relief Work of English Friends in this region, and are graphically narrated.

Price, bound in paper, 60c. postpaid.

For Sale By

Friends' Book and Tract Committee
144 East 20th St. New York City

The Lakeside

Eagles Mere, Pa.

Superior location, overlooking the beautiful lake, 2200 feet above the sea level. Sailing, boating, bathing, tennis and golf. House heated by steam, elevator, electric bells, private baths, hot and cold running water in a large number of rooms.

Garage. Personal management.

Send for booklet.

J. S. KIRK & SON, Proprietors.

M. GATCHEL
126 N. 21st St., PHILA.
MILLINERY, PLAIN AND FANCY
"Phon", Spruce 3637

WANTED—A POSITION AS COMPANION, CARE of an invalid, or as housekeeper.

Address E,
55 East Stewart Avenue,
Lansdowne, Pa.

WANTED—IMMEDIATELY—A STENOGRAPHER Will pay prevailing rate of salary.
AMERICAN FRIENDS' STEVENS COMMITTEE,
20 South 12th Street, Phila., Pa.

FOR RENT—EIGHT-ROOM FURNISHED COTTAGE, bath, open plumbing, hot and cold water, town and spring water. Several months daily, half hour ferry service to Newport and Narragansett Pier. Excellent opportunity where there are one of more invalids in family. Meals must be taken at Maplewood.
Apply DR. W. LINCOLN BATES,
Jamestown, R. I.

The beautiful lawn, the productive garden, or the well washed automobile, may bespeak the satisfactory service of

Rhoads Nonkink Hose

It is light and smooth; easy to pull about; a pleasure to use; so built that it will not soon kink or break.

J. E. RHOADS & SONS

PHILADELPHIA: 12 N. THIRD ST.
NEW YORK: 102 BEKMAN ST.
CHICAGO: 322 W. RANDOLPH ST.
BALTIMORE AGENCY: 37 S. CHARLES ST.
FACTORY AND TANNERY, WILMINGTON, DEL.

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE MATERIAL THAT WE SELL

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY
MANUFACTURERS
PHILADELPHIA

Philadelphia's
Representative Store

ELKINS, MORRIS & CO. BANKERS

REPRESENTATIVES

PAUL W. BROWN
JAMES P. MAGILL

LAND TITLE BUILDING
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

RAILROAD AND
PUBLIC UTILITY BONDS
FOR
CONSERVATIVE INVESTMENT.

FULL PARTICULARS ON REQUEST.

SEE WALKER & KEPLER

FOR

Good Electrical Work

531 CHESNUT ST. -:- PHILA.

HARRY S. LEE 313 WALNUT STREET PAINTER AND GRAINER

ANTIQUÉ and OFFICE FURNITURE RESTORED
JOBGING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO
ESTIMATES

Letchworth Cottage Spring Lake Beach, N. J.

Open for the Season 1918

A. C. & S. H. Letchworth

R. C. Ballinger Ernest R. Yarnall John A. Stratton
TELEPHONES

Bell—Spruce 17-81 - - Keystone—Race 637

R. C. BALLINGER & CO.
CONTRACTORS and BUILDERS

218 N. Thirteenth St. Philadelphia.

ALFRED C. HAINES

Building Glass and Paints
56 N. Front St., Philadelphia.

WM. H. PILE'S SONS

BOOK AND JOB PRINTING

422 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO THE

PRINTING OF BOOKS AND CATALOGS

ALBERT C. RIDLEY
1714 SANSOM STREET

Engraving and Printing
FINE BUSINESS STATIONERY

Wedding Invitations, Calling Cards, Greeting
Cards, Die Stamped Writing Paper

TELEPHONE—LOCUST 1782

New Strength In Securities

IN the face of Germany's onslaughts in Europe, the securities market has shown convincing strength.

Our current list of bonds and short-term notes includes issues combining in unusual degree intrinsic value and liberal yield.

Send for PF-160

The National City Company

Correspondent Offices in 24 Cities
Philadelphia—1421 Chestnut St.
Telephone—555 Locust
Bonds Short Term Notes Acceptances

GIRARD TRUST CO. BROAD and CHESTNUT STS.

CAPITAL
AND
SURPLUS } $10,000,000

Acts as Executor, Trustee, Guardian, Administrator, Assignee and Receiver. Safes to Rent in Burglar-proof Vaults. Interest Allowed on Deposits. :: ::

E. B. MORRIS
PRESIDENT

Friends Arch St. Centre

304 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Provides comfortable accommodations for guests by the day or week. Meals at moderate prices.

AMELIA D. FEATHERSTONE, Matron.

FOUR—MARKET 1871.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 91.

FIFTH-DAY, SIXTH MONTH 13, 1918.

No. 50.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price $2.00 a year in Advance.

Publisher, DAVIS H. FORSYTHE.

Editors { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
 DAVIS H. FORSYTHE,
 MARY WARD.

Make remittances payable to

THE FRIEND,

No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

which Whittier has helped to immortalize in his poem. "Revelations:"

Still, as of old, in Beavor's Vale,
Oh Man of God! our hope and faith
The elements and stars assail,
And the awed spirit holds its breath,
Blown over by a wind of death.

I pray for faith, I long to trust;
I listen with my heart, and hear
A Voice without a sound: Be just,
Be true, be merciful; reverse
The Word within thee. God is near.

MY HAT AND THY HAT.

We are told that in one of the many free interviews between William Penn and King Charles, the conversation turned upon the "new sect," which the king wished to know to better purpose. "How," said the king, "does your religion differ from other forms of religion?" "In this," said Penn, "the difference in our relations is the same as that between thy hat and mine; mine has no ornaments."

Doubtless in the further conversation, Penn elaborated his definition. It is rather fortunate for us of to-day that this brief statement is all that has survived of this particular conversation; we know very well what he meant from the lessons his life has taught and from what he has written, and it must be the task of each generation of his successors and of each individual of each generation to exemplify in a life of simple living the truth that Penn had at heart.

He must have told King Charles of the principle of the Inner Light, whether or not to the latter's real enlightenment is a question of doubt, and how the vision had come to him that from this principle, put into practice, was to grow that beautiful Quaker contribution to universal religion, "the practice of the presence of God," that relying upon this inward teacher, there would grow under the nurturing influence of Divine Grace, an ability to rely upon Spiritual Experience, which would prove to be the Power so often alluded to, that no man can bestow upon another and no man can take away; that out of these two, the indwelling and inshining light and the resulting assurance in God's protection in all things essential to the soul's welfare, there would result a life that would bespeak the Light that guided it.

It was this life that Penn must have had in mind when he answered the king as he did by his reference to the hat.

George Fox did not often play with words as Penn did. His declarations are mostly of the sledge hammer order, and very seldom does he attempt to put into one short sentence the lesson he wants to teach. More profound, however, than Penn's treatment is that of Fox. He tells us how in the Vale of Beavor was opened to him the great lesson of his early manhood,

George Fox tells us in the Journal that there came to him a clear revelation of what he was called to do, and he says he was glad he was called to the task. It was an active service that was laid upon him, and though eight or nine English gaols claimed him as prisoner and some of them more than once, and at times the confinement was measured by years and not by months, the full measure of completed service seems to us now, after almost two-and-a-half centuries have passed, to have included just what was given him to do.

A greater contrast in the outward could hardly be found than that afforded by these two men, Fox and Penn. One springing from a lowly home, with the instincts of that home and of the training that came from it imbedded firmly in his being, the other in every fibre an aristocrat. They, however, served the same kind of people and in equal degree appealed to all. There was a great melting and cementing process that seemed to be a part of the new religion that they had embraced. What they would have said to-day had they been witnesses to the awful carnage that outstrips all that Europe experienced in their generation we do not know, but we can not go far astray in supposing that the generous spirit of Penn would have been very tolerant of the feelings of others who said they must lay their lives on the altar of their country. For himself and for those who were joining the new Society, many of them trained soldiers in more than one battle, his answer to be true to his character and to what he has left on record would have been to withhold from all warfare because it was right so to do.

But of this we may be assured. They would have found great satisfaction in the active relief work Friends are rendering to those in distress and they would have given their full measure of assistance. They may have said that as hundreds of thousands are giving up their lives in Europe to-day from what they conceive to be the noblest of motives, shall we, who have had another vision, fail to measure up to our standard as they have measured up to theirs?

They spoke in world terms, those men of the seventeenth century, and they may have ventured the query—Is Peace too small to die for? As our brothers willingly surrender all that they can give, even life itself, for honor, for love of home and country and for truth as they see it, can we make a smaller surrender? They would have only one answer for this, "Peace is a great adventure," some one has said, and when the world has seen it so, there will be an end of carnal warfare.

The lot of the Friend with conscientious convictions against war has been made as easy as a government like ours can make it. In return for this favor that has all along been shown us it behooves us to render a full allegiance to all that our consciences will permit, but more than this it becomes us to put to the test whenever the right openings present our faith in the ideal that was Penn's when he explained to King Charles the difference between the two hats and that which came to Fox in the Vale of Beavor and which he afterward chiseled into his Journal in that strong, stately language, "I was to bring them off from this and that idolatry and I was moved to cry against this and that wrong practice."

D. H. F.

CONSERVING HOME LIFE.

EDITH E. WILDMAN.

In these days of multiplied goings and comings, and numerous organizations which seem to spring up overnight, demanding an increasing amount of our time and strength, we are indeed in grave danger of undervaluing, if not altogether neglecting, the heart of our social structure, the home. Our tendency is to make of it merely a starting and stopping-place instead of a place in which to live.

Most of us are aware of this danger, some of us are almost helpless before it, a few are managing to avoid it in one way or another, but all of us are asking for specific ways in which to meet it. It is always hard and perhaps unwise to lay down definite rules for the more intimate relations of life. Those things which depend on such intangible forces as spiritual atmosphere and personality never seem to be adequately expressed when reduced to words and formulae. So, in the problem of the home there are such varying needs, duties and opportunities that none of us may formulate a plan for all. Yet there are some of the broader phases which we may consider profitably.

In the first place, we should examine carefully the activities that are taking us out and away. Are they valuable? Are they even remotely vital? Do they tend to develop a natural and wholesome social atmosphere, or are they merely artificial devices to meet a feverish unrest? Trace them—if you can—to their ultimate goal.

In the second place, how is that time spent at home employed? Is it restless? Is it healthfully regular? Is it a time for storing up inspiration?

Perhaps we need to play surgeon to our present programs. Let us cut away a little here, graft on something there, straighten it all in a cast of wholesome simplicity and build it up with a strong tonic of love of service. The things with which we are concerned should be either of real service to others or of inspirational value to ourselves, or else dropped out of our lives.

If life is so full of outside activities that the family is almost never all together, and some or all of its members are always in a hurry and never caught up; if there is no time for an intimate and unhurried discussion, a just being together, there must be a careful diagnosis of the program we are following. We cannot be at our best in our service abroad if there is not a background of spiritual balance and restful naturalness in our home life.

The character growth of boys and girls depends very little upon precept or conscious training, but very largely upon the steady, regular atmosphere of the home. And just here let me add that we do not value enough sometimes the place of wholesome food and regular hours in the forming of the atmosphere of the home.

A system of home training, a formula of home influence can not be devised, and applied ready made to any home but must be built up wholesomely and sanely in the home, as the natural expression of those lives which make that home. I believe that young people unconsciously adopt the standards and ideals, not that have been told or preached to them, half so much as the principles that have been lived and worked out before them in the home and have so become a part of their home experience. A boy will adopt a principle of business, of conduct, of politics, or of spiritual truth that has been demonstrated to him consistently and convincingly and with unflinching vision by his father in his every day life, when no amount of conclusive argument or careful presentation could have induced him to accept it otherwise.

Let us then make every effort to conserve and develop to the best this most vital influence. Not only are parents responsible, but the older brothers and sisters as well, though the father and mother must always serve as balance wheels, or safety valves perhaps, as the need may be. Let us not substitute the dross of life for the gold, and let us be doubly sure that the gold is pure and struck with the image of the King.

—From American Friend.

SELMA, OHIO.

A DREAM.

Some years ago it was my rare privilege to be told a dream. Very often the inconsequent folly of dreams makes them poorly worth the time spent in their telling. But this dream was not so. It moved me deeply and has remained one of the treasures of my spirit.

A noble and sweet-souled woman was she to whom the dream was given. One whose being was alive to the fine touch of the Master; one who rejoiced in the thoughts of great minds, whether revealed in music, in line and color or in spoken words; one to whom the life of the spirit was a full and living thing.

In the language of the old Bible, she fell asleep and dreamed a dream.

In her dream, as she walked the streets of her own city, she found herself in the midst of a throng of people walking all in the same direction. Their faces were eager and expectant and their numbers constantly increased; it was evident, soon, that they were going toward the old Music Hall.

With growing wonder and interest she moved with the throng until they turned a corner and came suddenly on the building they sought, and behold it bore a large placard, "Jesus Christ will be here to-day." Awe-struck she entered and took her seat; she glanced about her and lo, the Master sat beside her!

The music began; beautiful and exquisitely rendered it was, but for her the music was like a misty dream. Heart and soul and spirit were flooded and overpowered by the presence of the Master, beside her. He spoke no word, and how long she sat in the silent ecstasy of that Presence she could not say; time was not. But at length the music ceased and all the people rose to leave the building. Then she noticed that they moved in awe-struck silence and that their faces were rapt and full of solemn joy.

Yet when they left the building each spoke low and eagerly to his neighbor, "Did you see Him? Did you see Him?" And always came back the same answer: "He sat beside me!"

E. M. S.

FRIEND COURT-MARTIALED.

A. Barratt Brown is known to several of our Philadelphia Friends, his father, A. Kemp Brown, whose recent very acceptable visit is fresh in many minds, is known to many more of us. A. B. B., at Budbrooke Barracks, in Warwick, on Fourth Month 27th, made the following statement:—

I gladly admit having refused to put on khaki on the 16th. I need hardly say that it was from no want of respect for the military authorities, from whom I have received a uniform courtesy which I desire to acknowledge, but on the ground of long and firmly held convictions which prevent me from counting myself a soldier or undertaking any military duties or alternative services imposed in their stead. For that reason I cannot admit being on "active service," but as I am deemed to be so, I accept the full charge in a technical sense to facilitate procedure.

I am a life-long member of the Society of Friends, or Quakers, who have upheld for two-and-a-half centuries a vigorous protest against all war and military service. For the last ten years I have written and spoken against war in the name of Christianity as I interpret the spirit and teaching of Jesus. My views have deepened with the course of the present conflict. I have refused to enlist when offered a commission as a University graduate, and I have refused to be conscripted. I opposed the first Military Service Act in 1916 as a sign of the increasing hold of militarism on this country, and with four colleagues on the National Committee of the No-Conscription Fellowship I served a term of two months' imprisonment in lieu of fine for a leaflet demanding the repeal of the Act. In the Autumn of 1916, the Birmingham Local Tribunal granted me a certificate of absolute exemption on grounds of conscience, and I was able to continue my work as a lecturer in religious and social philosophy. Early this year, the National Service authorities appealed against my exemption. I declined to contest the appeal before a tribunal which was committing my fellows to the trenches or to prison, and the certificate was withdrawn. I am therefore now before you, gentlemen. I have declined various opportunities by which I might have escaped the present consequences of my condition. I do not wish to press my personal claims at a time when so many of my fellows, including several of my own friends, are enduring such unspeakable sufferings of body and soul for what they believe to be right. I shall be content if my own action avails in some degree to swell the rising tide of protest against war and military methods and to further the Kingdom of God, whose interests I believe can only be preserved or advanced by reliance on the spirit of active love and good-will to all men. I also hope that my further experience of imprisonment will help me to work in the future for the abolition of the present penal system and of the social evils from which crimes and punishments alike so largely spring. In this hope, then, and in the confidence that loyalty to the spirit of Jesus is the highest service I can offer to my country and to humanity, I take my stand and await the penalties that follow.

LETTERS OF FRANCIS W. PENNELL.

(Continued from page 535.)

SEVENTH-DAY, A. M., Eleventh Month 3, 1917.

Last evening I said nothing of our excursion to the cemetery on the first, All Saints' Day. The day is observed by devout Catholics, and the praying of souls through purgatory is thoroughly systematized. I had been to the cemetery once before, but do not recall telling you anything about it. To a stranger it is one of the unique spots of the city. Only the poor are buried in the soil. The others are placed for a period of three or five years in cells in mortuary walls. The largest of these, in the form of a large circle, must contain about 4000 cells, these arranged in four or five tiers. At the front of each cell is the legend, usually simply the name and date of death, very frequently a cross, occasionally some remarks. The material used for these fronts varied from adobe to the finest marble, and it is surprising to see the various styles, plain or ornamental, in which the cross is presented. The tombs were richly adorned with garlands and other floral decorations, some most beautiful, with exquisite orchids and other beauties.

There are also two such mortuary walls into the sides of the cemetery, one full, an overflow from the main, the other with but few interments; the place where are deposited suicides and those who die unconfessed. In the latter wall were some rich tombs, one of a Dr. —, another of a "Camacho," one of the first families here. Also I must mention the separate family and individual monuments of the very rich, quite elaborate with inscriptions, birds or statuary, as often the case with us. One of the finest was of General Rafael Uribe-

Uribe, the liberal leader, who, if I recall, was assassinated a few years ago.

But what was of most interest was to see the chapel opened—I believe this is its one day of use in the year. Within were elaborate figures and paintings, one I recall of a soul escaping from purgatory. We stood just within the door and watched. On the left at a table were two women selling prayers to be said for the benefit of the souls in purgatory; on the right side, at another table, and evidently receiving much, were two women who kept calling, "Almoha por el culto de las arimas" ("Gifts for alms for [or on behalf of] the worship of the souls.") Evidently gifts from the living are a material help to the souls in passing quickly through purgatory flames.

But the sight which seemed the most appalling travesty of religion was what we saw later when walking through the poorer part of the cemetery. There the graves were in the soil, marked with a rude inscription or only a wooden cross. It is for the families to tend the graves, so all this portion of the cemetery was a riot of weeds and disorder. There, before some obscure grave was a priest, poorly clad, of unpleasant features, over his head the most torn umbrella I've ever seen, standing in the midst of a small group of peasants, and in a see-saw, sing-song repeating Latin. They were paying him sing-song by sing-song (I know not whether to call them paternosters or not.) The Birchetts reported in English one speech of the "reverend" priest. The poor fellow paying said that the priest hadn't said all he'd been paid for. With a sneer, the priest asked if he hadn't said the "five." The poor, knowing certainly nothing of Latin, could not dispute the point, but I suspect he was being defrauded of a few prayers. Let us hope the poor kinsman in purgatory didn't miss them.

What a tremendous wealth of priestly legend the Church has accumulated in its long history! Here within two blocks the Church of St. Teresa was advertising in flaming letters her holy day, and the unrivaled intercessory power of, I think it called her, the bride of Jesus. Churches to our Lady of this or that, always the Virgin Mary, occur everywhere over the city and the country. In the large church across the street (I recall six churches within a radius of three blocks from here) is a life-size figure of Christ upon the cross, and as I go by each day I see the prostrations of the faithful. So constantly the worship of this or that image as being itself miraculous, even the Hermanos Cristianos, you will recall, telling me the sacred history of the apparition of the Virgin imaged in their church. The crudity of much in the church here I can't believe that our Catholic friends at home would accept. F. W. P.

"LA TRINIDAD," Libano, Tolima, Colombia.

Twelfth Month 23, 1917.

DEAR ONES AT HOME:—

This date, and I think also Christmas, finds me luxuriating on a coffee plantation in what must surely be the most delightful climate in the world. I have persistently advocated the delights of the climate of the right altitude up the sides of a tropical mountain-range, and Libano seems to have found, for me at least, the right elevation. Moreover, I had not appreciated the almost complete freedom from noxious insect-life of such a location, had indeed expected the contrary. But here we ride and our horses are free from any pests; we live in houses absolutely open, and not only is the temperature delightful, but neither fly nor mosquito ever comes to bother us. Perhaps later, in the lower Magdalena, I shall learn the perils and plagues of the tropics, but here nature does not seem to possess any enemy to man.

"La Trinidad" and the adjoining estate, "La Virginia," both belonging to Señors Mallarino and Vega, together comprise over twelve hundred hectares of land. A hectare is about the size of a city block, so you can realize the size of this property. Most of the area is planted to coffee; they have told me the number of thousand coffee bushes here, but with my usual ability for forgetting figures, I have at present no conception of this. The thousands are many.

My window looks out upon a coffee-plantation, so first I will tell about this. The bushes grow higher than one's head. But this is not desired, so at about shoulder-high they are cut off and forced to spread horizontally. This gives more light to ripen the berries. The bushes are spaced some ten to fifteen feet apart, each is widely spreading, with dense narrow-leaved glossy dark foliage. The flowers are small, in clusters, pure white and fragrant. The berries are small, fleshy, bright-red, each large enough to contain the coffee seeds (grains), plus some surrounding pulp. The plantation is an attractive sight. It is rendered much more so by the tall gracefully spreading trees, which are used for shading. These belong to the Acacia group, and their feathery foliage and red flowers are beautiful in themselves.

Coffee requires an immense amount of work; to start, to keep free from weeds, to harvest, to prepare for market, and to ship. Once a plantation is started it lasts for many years. Several times a year it must be picked (but little is being picked now). But it seems to me that after picking the real work begins. The peasant farmers prepare their small crops by hand, but all large estates must use considerable machinery. The pulp of the fruit, except for fertilizer, appears to be wholly waste. First it is softened and removed by soaking and fermentation, later by washing in water. Then for days the coffee is dried. After this the remaining dry husks are removed by a fanning machine, through which three passings frees the grains. After much more drying these are ready for shipment. Mallarino and Vega ship to New York. The short few hours' journey by mule over the hills to the railroad at San Lorenzo costs, for each large sack one dollar, after that the entire long trip to New York only six dollars. When you see the quantities and quantities of coffee going on mules from here, and even over the Central Cordilleras from Manizales, it makes you certain that in this land of abominable transportation railroad lines would soon pay for their construction.

But this letter is not a disquisition upon coffee. Be relieved, there is no other extensive agricultural industry on these two haciendas, so I must soon speak of recent doings. (Before leaving the subject of coffee I might mention how seriously England's embargo has hit the industry here). First, let me describe further this house and the others near it. For of all my experiences, living here recalls to me most vividly the week spent in 1912 on a plantation in Louisiana.

PLENITUDE.

With Thy thoughts, oh, fill my mind,
Let me think them after Thee,
In Thy plenitude to find
Calmness and serenity.

Thou dost still the boisterous wave,
Thou dost calm the raging sea;
And Thine arm is stretched to save,
And Thy voice speaks peace to me.

Thou Thyself art being's goal,
Thou art healing for all woes;
Nothing less can stay my soul,
Nothing less can give repose.

Height nor depth my soul can move,
With Thy mighty power untied,
Filled with Thine unchanging love
Raise me to beatitude.

—CAROLINE HAZARD, in "The Yacowite and Other Verse."

I HAVE read somewhere a very quaint proverb: "White ants pick a carcass quicker and cleaner than a lion." Do you see the force of the saying? It means that little cares may more efficiently destroy our peace than a single great trouble, if, in a mistaken reverence for God's greatness (which is really unbelief), we refuse to cast them upon Him.—C. H. BUTCHER.

The following sermon, preached by Stephen Grellet, was found in an old manuscript, taken down from memory:—

First-day, Fourth Month 17th—At the North Meeting, Phila.

"A very interesting and instructive sermon from Stephen Grellet. He said there was a day of visitation in which it was shown to every soul what was required of it; that the time to see was while the light shone, and not when darkness had come upon us; there was the strait and narrow road to the kingdom; and the crooked by-paths of the world. There was a crowd of living witnesses to prove the efficacy of the Gospel plan, the consummation of which was peace and assurance forever. He repeatedly appealed to the youth present as having the witness within themselves that these things were true, as he described the effect of conviction upon the mind; that it was one thing to be convinced that this was the way, and another thing to walk in it.

"Each one had the secret witness for God in the soul pointing out the path to the kingdom, saying, 'This is the way, walk in it,' but oh, the snares of the world; the crooked by-paths that lead from the highway cast up for the ransomed and redeemed of the Lord to walk in, drew too many aside.

"He entreated us to ponder the paths of our feet; pointed out the awfulness of withstanding the Heavenly invitations and the inevitable misery that would ensue. He exhorted (those) who had proclaimed their faith to the world, who had declared upon whose side they were, and who was the Captain they meant to follow, to remember that they had made a free choice and if they were now unfaithful, it had been better they had never known what made for true peace, than having run well for a time to fall again into temptation.

"After he had concluded, Simon Gillen had a pertinent communication on the simplicity of the Gospel and the humility that should adorn the Christian character, and instanced among others the case of Paul, who while he was a learned, jealous, self-sufficient man, brought up at the feet of Gamaliel in all the philosophy of the times, was a persecutor of the saints, but as soon as he became blind, struck to the ground, a humbled and abased thing in his own eyes, he became the messenger of the Gospel to others."

LETTERS FROM ABROAD.

[The following extracts from C. E.'s reports to the home office, though seeming late in reaching THE FRIEND, are none the less interesting and are certainly most welcome.—ED.]

FOURTH MONTH 25, 1918.

DEAR FRIEND:—

On the 24th I joined Wilfred Shewell at the Maternite at Chalons, where we were most kindly received. For some time we have felt a certain indefinite anxiety for the safety of our groups in the "Zone des Armees" and we had proposed to each other a trip down the line in order to learn their status more accurately.

The population at Chalons has shrunk notably and for some days after its attack the inhabitants in many cases carried bedding and mattresses to the fields or woods where they preferred to spend the night. The destruction done is very easily seen, but fortunately it has not come very near the Hospital. One house was completely destroyed diagonally across the street from that occupied by our relief workers, with unfortunately the loss of about forty lives.

Work is proceeding at the Hospital precisely as though nothing had happened and the poise of the staff is truly admirable. The stress of the times has only increased the need of the work there, and after full conference it is thought wisest not to make any move now, though plans to be employed in an emergency have been formed. In the exodus above mentioned one mother pushed her two weeks' old child for eighty kilometres, accomplishing the distance in about two-and-a-half days. We spent the night at Chalons and went by car to Vitry-le-François the next morning with Dr. Heard. Nearly forty patients were waiting for her clinic and we were agreeably impressed by the energy and happy dispositions of the workers. They evidently have their work well in hand.

Incidentally, under the orders of them, W. Shewell and self, with assistance from others, were impressed as stretcher bearers and carried an ill woman nearly a mile from a hospital to her home. We were so glad to have been asked. Time there was, too, to visit the school where in early days of the war the Friends had their workshop and where a large number of huts were constructed.

The meeting between the schoolmaster and his wife and W. Shewell was cordial and delightful to see. We went on in the late afternoon to Sermaze and were soon in the midst of a group of Friends. Incidentally, the conditions about the Source are vastly improved by a new system of drainage which will alter conditions both inside and outside the premises occupied.

A hasty visit to the Château Hospital in the evening allowed us to see the new lighting system in operation. Except for storage batteries the work is about complete and reflects the greatest credit on Leslie O. Heath, C. T. Whitney and Alan G. Smith who are chiefly responsible for its development. The consumption of "essence" is about three litres per diem. Words do not describe the improvement in cheer, efficiency and safety which the change has made. On Sixth-day we again visited the Hospital and were shown the whole establishment, privileges of attending during important operations, visiting the various wards inspecting the dressings of various surgical cases, of enjoying a substantial lunch and working at the wood pile, were all offered and enjoyed as we found ourselves able. In the afternoon we much enjoyed the rare privilege of a walk to the woods south of Sermaze. It was astonishing to me to see the extent of the ground overturned by wild boars who come from the woods at night and literally upturn acres of ground.

Fruit blossoms and black thorn were charming, and many flowers new to Americans frequently caught our attention. It was a great privilege to be away for a time from shells, air raids, and the sense of unavoidable tension which the offensive of the last five weeks has brought over every thinking person.

On returning to the hospital we found that Dr. Babbitt had gotten through with his day's operations and he then took us to Bettancourt.

Before passing from the Hospital it would be unfair not to say that it probably represents the high water mark of our endeavor here.

Everywhere a spirit of cheerful, intelligent, co-operation is noticeable and it is absolutely astonishing that so much can be done and has been done in a comparatively small château.

The new barracks we are to build will increase the capacity, but also, I fear, throw a heavier strain on Dr. Babbitt. It is necessary not only that we keep Dr. Paeker, but that we, at once, provide an assistant or associate surgeon. Three times the number of patients that can be accommodated are anxious to enter, only cases certainly operable are admitted.

We found a very delightful and congenial circle at Bettancourt, excellent work is being done and its field of usefulness will be extended by the presence of Dr. Outland. Edith Coale has drawn all to her by the efficiency of her work and her charm of manner. We could speak also of the English members of this group in similar terms, but refrain as their names are not known to you.

There was just time for a hasty trip on foot to Charmont, where several old people from the Bar-le-Duc district are under the care of Frances C. Ferris. She was at the time absent on a short vacation. Her work is isolated and calls for courage and considerable devotion, both of which she cheerfully supplies.

Returning to Sermaze we were pleased to find that all our horses from the Aisne, Somme district, had arrived in good condition and the American boys, Binford and Macy, who had come the long journey with the horses and though tired and dirty, were still in excellent spirits.

We can certainly be proud of our lads who very often perform tasks of similar devotion, which do not come to our notice. In passing, I may mention four men, two Burdsalls, Vlaskamp and Wetherald, who were on a short vacation. They arrived, their train being late, at Besançon at about midnight, they then walked twenty-five kilometres to Ornavs, getting in at 4 A. M., turned in for a nap, but were up and at it at the regular shop hours next day.

Seventh-day morning we visited Bar-le-Duc and were very kindly shown chief matters of interest by Sophia M. Fry and Rachel F. Alexander. Although the population has been reduced, many women now come in from neighboring villages to obtain embroidery work, and to attend the clinics of Dr. Erp and for the other matters, relief and sale of furniture, which are parts of the work of that équipe.

S. M. Fry is much pleased to note that relief clothing from America has at last been landed and she will inform Rebecca Carter as to general reception, etc., as soon as it reaches her warehouse. The evening was very pleasantly spent again at Sermaze, where the group was so large that the evening meal had to be divided into two sections. After a social gathering we had the usual opportunities to discuss the varied topics of interest, state of work, aspirations, disappointments, vacations, permits, etc., which make up the problems in our workers' lives. Many of the difficulties are really occasioned by the intensity of interests which the workers feel and their trouble in giving, or getting for them, an adequate expression.

Jos. H. Haines having just completed a week's trip to Dole and Ornavs, in which he was accompanied by L. Ralston Thomas, and W. Shewell and I having had our visit to the Marne and Meuse, we feel on putting our notes together, that in the main there is a pretty good "state of society."

CHARLES EVANS.

EAUX PAU BONNES, Basse Pyrénées, 4-25-1918.

MY DEAR PARENTS:—

While William hunts missing people I shall write you a letter about the time as it passes. In the first place, I hope you will get the pictures we are sending. . . . It is a charming place and even in the rain quite nice. We have had only two days clear, but we hope all of the snow and rain will soon be over for the season, also the cold. I cannot imagine being too hot for a long time to come. . . .

One hotel, the big one, Hotel de France, is cleaned and the first hundred refugees have come. They are mostly the peasant class and there are sixty children among the hundred, so you see the kind. I should think at least fifteen were very old people. The children are very dear and really a very healthy bunch. The other day I washed about twenty of them, using William's little scrubbing brush on them. Some were very dirty and others remarkably clean, considering they have been on such a long journey. . . .

We have gotten three of the smaller hotels ready for refugees to-morrow. The refugees really like the old houses where they can have one stuffy room, far better than these grander hotels, where things are not to their taste. I take it this way, the French like it hot and do not mind how stuffy it is, while the English want it cold and fresh. And the Americans like it warm and fresh at the same time. So go the national tastes.

We have rather an interesting équipe. Laurison you know. Then Meyer is sous chef. It was his desire. He has been treasurer of the F. W. V. A. and really likes to work with people. . . . Then there is Madame Miraten, whom I discovered the other night was a friend of Dr. Koenig's and lived at the same town. She is a delightful person and greatly adds to our company. Was it not interesting to have her know the Koenig's? Now she attends Pastor Wagner's church. It is very nice to know such fine French people. Madame does some writing and is quite literary. There is another, Mlle. Grand who is very good-hearted, very energetic and the soul of kindness. Francis Sharpless, a boy Marshall from California and Oldham, who is also most kind-hearted, make up our group.

Lawyer Clark, from Seattle, is in charge of the Red Cross in these two prefectures, Bassee and Haute Pyrénées. He is the typical University American man and so easier for me to understand. It is remarkable how difficult it really is for different classes of the same nationality and different nationalities to work together intimately. I think it is a great education for all of us. And really people mean very well. I am most interested.

Every nation thinks its own people most polite because they do the things they are used to. I wish you could hear us. A (Catholic) Sister sits by the fire chatting about giving to the sewing class. She comes twice a day to see any one who is ill. It is interesting to note the way in which the French people think the sick-room should be kept—all the windows should be closed and the floors washed. Also eggs are not wholesome. So I do not interfere. In one of our houses there is a child with measles and it is interesting how quietly we take it. He is getting very much better and we hope that it will not go any farther. I do not know how long we shall be here. We are comfortable. If the world does not mind I am content to pick up pins and I shall spend the rest of the time making friends, seeing the country and doing such things as anyone asks me to do. I do not think that we shall be home until the end of the war, according to the desire of all of our ambassadors. This is a most picturesque country and one for sheep instead of cows as in Switzerland. . . . To-morrow we may have another hundred people who will fill up our houses. William and I have three of the smaller hotels and we shall be very busy when they are full.

With a great deal of love from your daughter,

MARY E. DUGUID.

CHARMONT, MATIC, Fourth Month 20, 1918.

DEAR FOLKS AT HOME:—

I wish I had Corona (my typewriter) here to write you this, for not only would there be enough copies to go around, but you wouldn't have such a painful time deciphering my handwriting.

I am to stay here at Charmont for the present, till Frances Ferris comes back. Frances is at Troyes now, taking a partial vacation, but has to come back sooner than she expected, because Jean Alexander, real head of Charmont, who was to run it while Frances was away, has had an attack of neuralgia and had to take a vacation. (For the benefit of those who may not know what Charmont is, I'll explain that nine old ladies, refugees, are living here under our care. They are people too old or infirm to get to the cellar in case of bombardment, so we have provided this home for them where they will be quite safe.)

I have just been to say "Good evening" to the ladies. They are devoted to Frances, "Mademoiselle Française," as they call her—and miss her dreadfully now she is away. The old "grandmother," as they call her, names Frances her "Grosse fille" (big daughter), and says when she comes back she is going to tie her with a string so she won't run away again. Everybody in the village is devoted to her, too, and they keep asking about her and when she will come back. She certainly is just the person for this place and is doing wonderfully well.

This morning, Charles Evans and two other gentlemen came to visit us at Bar. Unfortunately I was very busy all the time they were there, so I saw very little of them, till we all left on the three o'clock train, they for Sermaize, I for Revigny, whence I rode here on bicycle. It certainly was good to see Charles Evans again. Everybody is so fond of him—he certainly is just the man for the job,—and it's no easy job either. Joseph Haines is helping him now, which we are all very glad of, for he had a great deal more than one man could possibly do. We left for the train, with one of the gentlemen carrying one of my packages, Charles Evans taking my suitcase, while the third brought up the rear with my hand-bag and another package—(they had given me about half a dozen, at the last minute, to take to various people)—I can tell you I felt big being escorted in such style by the head of the Mission, the head of the Americans and another important member (I don't know just what position the latter holds). When we got on the train, C. E. announced that he needed a little nourishment, so he whipped out a bag of dates and passed it around. We finished the last one just before we got to Revigny. At Revigny I left them, and after getting my bike from the baggage car, loading her with parcels, waving good-bye, and waiting for two exceedingly long trains to pass, I made my way to the "Maison des Parents" at Revigny, where a married sister of Jean and Rachel Alexander is keeping house for the people who come to visit their relatives in the hospital for wounded soldiers. Jean Alexander is taking a rest cure with her here. They gave me the loveliest teaparty, with cocoa made of milk. We haven't had any cocoa at night for supper for a long while now, because the supply for three months for the whole Mission was stolen, while it was on the wharf, waiting to be taken to Paris. So I was pretty glad to get some. We had also chestnut jam—a French delicacy which is most delicious. After chatting with them for about an hour, I loaded my parcels back onto the bike and said good-bye. They certainly are delightful people, and most deliciously English.

My next stop was Bettancourt, where I had an errand for the "directrice" of the hospital for children there. I had a short chat with Gertrude Jacob, who came over with us on the Rochambeau. She feels her training does not fit her for her job there, and that she could be more useful in the Red Cross, so is going to change over. I went from Bettancourt to Charmont by the short cut road over the hills. After quite a climb I looked out on the right and saw a most lovely view over the valley to the hills in the distance. Bettancourt, a long sprinkling of low red-roofed houses, lay just at the foot of the hills, and further on, to the left, was Rancourt, through which I had just passed. Rancourt is larger, with a tall church spire in the middle. Beyond, were cultivated fields, clusters of trees here and there and in the distance, a row of blue hills. It reminded me of the rolling country of central-Eastern Pennsylvania, near Reading, except for the absence of water and the red-roofed yellow clay houses—so much more picturesque than our new modern-looking ones. I went down the other side of the hill "lickety cut," and across the plain, where I could see Charmont on the next hill-top. Half way up the Charmont hill, a friend came running down to meet me, and after an enthusiastic greeting, we climbed up the steep back path to "Renaumont," as the house here is called—built on the site of an old chateau, of which only the moat and the statue of the Virgin in the court remain.

I never saw such a profusion of wild flowers as there is here. The meadows are yellow with cow-slips and ox-slips, and beautiful little pink and white primroses grow where there is no grass, and periwinkles, violets and lots of other flowers, whose names I have no idea of, peep up from the grass along the roads. Our tables are full of vases of wild flowers, and there is a lovely dish of pink and white marguerites (bachelor's buttons) stuck in moss.

Last week the dentist came, and did twenty-two patients in five-and-a-half hours. How's that for a record? Olive and I were two of the patients, and since he spent a whole hour on me, he did the other twenty-one in four-and-a-half hours. He looked at me in the A. M. and said he would have to see me again after dinner, and would hurt me like everything, so I had the pleasant prospect to look forward to, during the noon-day meal. I didn't mind though, for I'm quite used to that kind of filling, and he did not hurt as much as that, anyway. He is a Scotchman, Dr. Matheson, a very good dentist, and a very nice person, so I enjoyed my appointment very much, and am looking forward to another next week. One cunning little refugee girl of twelve had the appointment just before me. She had had a tooth pulled without cocaine or any desensitizer, and had never turned a hair. I call that pretty good pluck.

It is nearly time to go to Bettancourt for the medicine. We go every week, and to-day I guess we'll stop to tea, as I had three invitations to do so yesterday.

There are eleven new baby rabbits here now—the cutest little coddgers you ever saw. And the six ex-babies are quite grown up. They have one hen, sitting on ducks' eggs, and another about to begin on hens' eggs, so the next time I come, I expect to see a lot of fluffy little chicks and ducklings.

MARGERY SCATTERGOOD.

CHILDREN'S CORNER.

THE LATCH-STRING STORY.—"During the American Revolution the Indians were incited by the British to burn the dwellings of the settlers and to murder the people. The back settlements, far away from towns or any assistance, were an easy prey for the prowling bands of savages, and the people lived in constant dread. Every evening brought tidings of massacre and slaughter, and every night the settlers barricaded their houses as strongly as they could, and lay down with their weapons beside them, even then being scarcely able to sleep for fear.

"One of these solitary houses was inhabited by a Friend and his family. They had always lived in perfect security and peace with all around, both red and white, and, having no apprehension of danger, had neither bolt nor bar to their door. The only means of securing their home from intruders was by drawing in the leathern thong by which the wooden latch was lifted from without. Even this precaution was never used—they slept peacefully in the log cabin, knowing full well that friend or foe could enter at any time by simply pulling the thong.

"When the massacres began they discussed the advisability of withdrawing the thong at nights as a protection against any enemy there might be about; but believing as they did that God had protected them until now and would continue to do so, for a long time they made no change. One night, however, alarmed by the dreadful rumors, they yielded to their fears, and before retiring to rest drew in the string and so secured themselves as well as they were able. In the middle of the night, the Friend, who had been tossing restlessly, asked his wife if she were asleep. She replied that she could not sleep for her mind was uneasy. He confessed that he could not either, and that he would feel safer if they put the string out as usual. She urged him to do so, and they lay down again, putting their trust wholly in God once more. Ten minutes later a dreadful war-whoop echoed through the forest, bringing fear to every heart, and almost immediately afterwards the Friends counted the footsteps of seven men pass the window of their room which was on the ground floor. The next moment the string was pulled, the latch lifted, and the door opened. A few minutes' conversation took place, but it was in the Indian language and was unintelligible to them. The result of it, however, was that the door was closed again and the Indians retired without having crossed the threshold. In the morning the smoking ruins of their neighbors' houses were seen.

"Some years afterwards when peace was restored and the colonists had occasion to hold conferences with the Indians, this Friend was appointed as one for that purpose, and speaking in favor of the Indians, he related the above incident. In reply an Indian rose and said that he himself had been in that marauding party, and that it was the simple circumstance of putting out the latch string, which proved confidence rather than fear, that had saved their lives and their property. When the door was found to be open they had said to one another, 'These people shall live, they will do us no harm, for they put their trust in the Great Spirit.' During all that troubled time the Indians never molested the Friends, though urged by the British to do so."

HOW AN IDOL WAS MADE IN MADAGASCAR.—A good many years ago a young married couple in the island of Madagascar were going to set up house. As no home was thought to be complete without a household god they asked a maker of idols to supply them with one. It was to be ready on a certain day; so, dressed in their best lambast they went to receive it. It was not made. But the idol maker promised that it should be ready by the evening, and asked them to wait in his house. He went to the forest, and brought home the branch of a tree, and set to work to carve the idol, while the young man and his wife sat and watched and chatted with him, and perhaps made a number of suggestions as to what sort of an idol they would like. In the evening he asked his visitors to take their meal of rice with him. They watched him brush the chips of wood, left from making the idol, into the fire-place, and add the small branches of the bough and then light the fire to boil the rice. When the meal was over, they paid about two dollars for their new god and returned home well content.

Shortly afterwards, a young Christian calling at their house was led to read to the wife that part of the forty-fourth chapter of Isaiah, which describes the making of an idol. With part he roasteth roast, maketh a fire, warmeth himself, and the residue thereof he maketh a god.

The woman was astonished at the exact description of what she herself had witnessed. She felt that must indeed be a true Book, she gave up her idol and in time became a follower of the Saviour, and in that humble home the daily worship of the true God took the place of idolatry.

Read Isaiah xlv: 9 to 20.

THE TWIN OF HER.

"For Mary hath chosen the good part which shall not be taken away from her."

Now the Martha of her stiffened to her load,
Down-weighing, of relentless daily care,
Now she straightened upright, would not bend nor break,
But held herself all iron standing there.

When the Mary of her called unto her soul,
And made a moan and cried to it in vain:
"Oh, this woman—look! She fretteth overmuch
And leaves no space for me; Lord, I complain."

But the Martha of her listened with the sigh
Of those too weary or too strong to rest:
"Tell who takes, then, this burden if I cease,
And empty both my hands upon my breast."

Oh, a soul divided is a soul forspect,
She went still asking: "Is it I? Or It?"
Low forever through the silence Mary spoke,
And Martha, sad and sure, did make reply.

Till the irony and harmony of death
Made out of these a concord high and sweet,
When the Martha of the woman, folding, passed,
Estranged from ease, she sought her Master's feet.

"Now my turn has come, my turn at last," she cried,
My turn to worship listening to Thy word,
Ah, but calm beyond her, fair above her still,
The Mary of her knelt before the Lord.

—ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS WARD, in "Christ in the Poetry of To-day."

AN OREGON TRAIL.

(Concluded from page 668.)

It was possible to include St. George's Catholic Mission School in our trip to the Muckleshoots. It is in charge of Charles De Decker, a Belgium priest, who has devoted most of his life to missionary work amongst the Indians. He and M. Boulet, whom we saw later, are very much of the type pictured by Parkman in his thrilling narrative of the Franciscan missionaries. The household and school at St. George's are conducted by "sisters" of the Glen Riddle connection and their work is in part maintained by the members of the Drexel family, known amongst them as "Sister Katharine." As Philadelphians we received most cordial welcome at their hands. They have about seventy children, mostly small. We inspected the five stories of their building, and found everything in perfect order and immaculately clean. The children were called to the school-rooms, where we observed their work in reading and arithmetic. They were well trained and while the methods of the so-called "formal discipline" are used, some of the results were better than are often observed under newer methods. Learning by rote has some advantages. The children looked exceedingly well and we were pleased to observe the emphasis put upon free play and an atmosphere of happiness. Lunch was moved forward to accommodate us and after a most satisfying repast and some photographing, we sped onward up the river valley now marked by signs of hop-raising and lumbering. Our objective was the farmer's house on the reservation. His office is to advise and direct the farming of the Indians and incidentally to give them a practical example of making a good home and farm. Unfortunately for us he was absent, although we saw him later in the day. A neighbor kindly consented to pilot us to homes of the Indians and we were glad to accept his services. We made about a half-dozen "family visits" and seemed not unwelcome. The priestly member of our party had lived amongst Indians not a little and so was able to make comparisons. He was very much pleased with the apparent advancement "in civilization and improvement." The novice of the party feels free to record that these Indians have fairly good houses and that these houses contain many of the necessary implements and much of the furniture of our modern life. The well-ordered use of these implements evidently demands much patient training. Probably the power of example of those who have advanced the furthest in these particulars is the most potent influence for good. Thus is the service of the Indian school most truly justified.

Our last nights in the Northwest were spent in Vancouver, where the currents of life flowed in different channels. Evidences of the great war were at every hand. Soldiers were marching to the station to entrain for Halifax. Raw recruits were being mustered in the park, wounded men (we counted three on the street in five minutes who had each lost one eye) were everywhere, determined women and girls, three or four in a single block, solicited assistance for soldier-relief, great buildings, just commenced or half-finished, were as silent as the grave, work on them having been arrested by the war. With it all the people did not seem depressed. Was their elevation of spirit natural or assumed? Without venturing an answer, one other observation was unescapable. The countenances of returned soldiers were marked with appealing expressions such as I had never seen before. Only a master like the great Italian poet Dante could do justice to what they told. To assure ourselves that this was no mere imagination we inquired of an acute resident observer and had the reply, "Oh, yes, we are painfully aware of that."

We had a happy retreat from these disquieting suggestions in the Glencoe Lodge. Hotels, like men, "come assorted," to use a familiar phrase of the late Charles Roberts, and we have omitted comment upon them in these notes. The Glencoe, however, is different, and visitors to Vancouver who might read this would thank us for pointing out the difference. In addition to most comfortable appointments, the proprietress is a virtuoso and her collection of Oriental furniture and curios is used to give an air of hominess to her hotel that is most attractive. In addition the service is almost entirely by Orientals (Chinese), and their quiet and graceful way of anticipating your needs is little less than charming. The Japanese and Chinese were in evidence in numerous lines of work in Oregon and Washington, as well as in Canada. We were told that prejudice against them has much subsided. In some places the Japanese seemed to monopolize the service of "red cap" porters at the railroad station. An experience with one of them gave us some surprise. The hand-luggage of three men made more than one man's burden at the Seattle station. The polite Japanese insisted upon carrying all. A "two-bit" tip from one of the party was graciously received, but when a second was offered by another it was as graciously declined. He could not be paid twice for the same job! Such discrimination is at least quite un-American!

We were one day in the Chinese Quarter of Vancouver. We had been ballied in a search for some hand-woven linen. Our faces must have shown our perplexity. A young Chinaman, attractively dressed, touched his hat and inquired if he could assist us. He proved to be an employed solicitor for advertisements in a leading paper, a student of wireless telegraphy and member of the Episcopal Mission for the Chinese. He was greatly interested in some account of the Tuckerton Wireless and said rather pathetically that he wished he could come to our country for study. In a real world democracy, such as he will hardly be called on to suffer exclusion!

Three days in such an atmosphere gave us rest and cheer for the homeward journey. On one of these days we had the uplift of a real Friends' meeting. There were but thirteen Friends present, although the number sometimes reaches forty. One member explained to us that they were not "pastoral Friends." Varieties aside, we were united in solemn worship and had a sense that One is our pastor as well as our Lord. George Hoyland, the clerk of the Monthly Meeting, was absent in Calgary, but his wife welcomed us that afternoon to their beautifully situated home in North Vancouver, where in good English style we drank tea.

The C. P. R., famous for service and scenery, carried us out of Vancouver. The veteran C. P. R. traveler of the party had never seen the mountains before, so early in the season. Their glittering snow mantles made resplendent beyond words the glory of lofty peak and deeply shaded defile. The atmospheric conditions as we threaded the Selkirks, were perfect. Glory upon glory unfolded "God is in the loneliness of the mountains." But we can draw near to them as to Him if we have a heart of sympathy.

We rested from the train that night at Field, under the shadow of Mount Stephen and the encircling mountains. Early next morning we were on our way with a new congenial companion in a whirling snowstorm to Banff. Mary S. (Schaffer) Warren was waiting in her automobile for us at the station. We had the warmest possible welcome from her husband and from her to their beautiful mountain home, with a ride before as well as after lunch. Our afternoon ride carried us on the new motor road toward Lake Louise. As we hoped we came upon deer and mountain sheep. Under the protection of the Park these wild animals are quite tame and pose unconsciously for the photographer. On our return trip we counted over seventy sheep and estimated that we had seen over one hundred. A party of sixteen Philadelphians in that region twenty years before had failed to see one! Pacific methods seem at least to win wild sheep!

That evening we rolled out of Banff on time and after three nights on the sleeper, were in Chicago again. Here we had our last touch with Indian affairs in a two hours' call at the U. S. Warehouse, where purchases for the Indian Department were proceeding. Those of us whose purchases are mostly governed by whim, might be surprised to see how much of a science has been developed in the standardizing tests of materials and provisions. The aim is to make a dollar have a hundred cents of value. The three purchasing warehouses of the Indian Bureau come under the purview of the Board of Commissioners.

The "Limited" carried us out of Chicago and into Philadelphia on time. The 750 miles of travel, in these disturbed times, without a single variation of schedule or untoward accident, were truly cause for thankfulness to a most kind superintending Providence. It seems fitting as well to record the conviction that the co-operation of men and circumstances to bring such results to pass contains the essence of the "new order" toward which despite confusion and pain, "the whole creation moves."

NEWS ITEMS.

CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTORS TO BE FURLOUGHED FOR FRIENDS' RECONSTRUCTION UNIT FOR AGRICULTURAL WORK.—In addition to what we published a week ago it seems appropriate to give the following statement, which was issued by the Committee on Public Information and made public through the general press on the 1st:—

The Order makes clear the fact which we think has been understood hitherto by Friends that conscientious objectors can not be discharged and released completely from all obligations of service. It makes it equally clear, however, that Friends who in accordance with the principles of their Church, are unable to accept any service as a part of the military organization, will be furloughed either for agricultural work or for Friends' Reconstruction Unit. It is also of interest to note that the provisions of previous orders concerning the treatment of conscientious objectors in camps are continued. The following provision in Section 8 of this Order is merely a continuance of the policy which has prevailed from the beginning:

"If, however, any drafted man, upon his arrival at camp either through the presentation of a certificate from his Local Board, or by written statement addressed by himself to the commanding officer, shall record himself as a conscientious objector, he shall not, against his will, be required to wear a uniform or to bear arms; nor, if, pending the final decision as to his status, he shall decline to perform, under military direction, duties which he states to be contrary to the dictates of his conscience, shall he receive punitive treatment for such conduct."

The probable date of the transfer of the men to Fort Leavenworth and the probable date of their furloughs remains uncertain at present writing.

RECENT ARRIVALS IN FRANCE.—Herbert Harlow Babl, Ivor, Virginia; William C. Biddle, Londsdowne, Pa.; Elliot Weld Brown, Brookline, Mass.; W. Walker Cheyne, Philadelphia, Pa.; Howard H. Douglas, Los Angeles, Cal.; Jesse Garrett Forsythe, Media, Pa.; Chester S. Graybill, Barmville, Pa.; Albert D. Hall, Pasadena, Cal.; J. Maldon Harvey, Fairmont, Indiana; Fred Ira Hester, Ridgefarm, Illinois; Floyd R. Horne, Des Moines, Iowa; Josiah P. Marvul, Richmond, Indiana; Earl E. Miller, Manchester, Oklahoma; Sumner A. Mills, Indianapolis, Ind.; Ezra A. Moore, Dudley, North Carolina; Mervin S. Myers, Lancaster, Pa.; Effred Robert Outland, George, N. C.; William R. Redick, Spiceland, Indiana; William K. Reichert, New York City; James G. Stanislawski, Oakland, Cal.; Russell W. Thornburg, Urbana, Ohio; John Clark Winston, Jr., Redlands, Cal.

FRIENDS' SERVICE NOTES.—There is now being published in Paris a monthly magazine, Reconstruction, devoted to the interests of the war relief work of Friends in all parts of the world. The magazine is, of course, chiefly devoted to the work in France which is by far the most extensive of the various fields. We have in stock a limited number of copies of the first issue, which will be sent to any address upon receipt of ten cents in stamps. The subscription price for one year is $1.00. The subscriptions should be sent to our office. This magazine direct from the field is the best possible source of information of an enterprise which in many ways is the most extensive ever undertaken by the Society of Friends. It will greatly encourage the boys to have a large list of subscribers in America and we hope that at least one copy will be going to every Friends' meeting.

Our latest check from the War Relief Commission of the Mennonite Church is for $20,000. This makes a total of $38,000 received from them within the past three months. As yet we have been able to secure passports for only three of their men. Friends in the Five Years' Meeting, which has more than twice as many members as the Mennonite Church and considerably more than 100 workers in France, should be inspired by this generous support of another church to a much greater measure of sacrificial giving.

The $40,284.03 which has been received from the Five Years' Meeting during the past three months represents a very great interest on the part of almost all Friends and a very real sacrifice on the part of many. The increasing scope of our work, however, creates the hope that the present rate of receipts may very rapidly increase. Fifth Month 31st marked the end of our first twelve months' work during which we have been successful in raising the budget of $500,000, which the scope of the work up to the present has required. The receipts for the first year were $513,105.73. A full statement concerning the details of receipts and expenditures will be issued within a short time.

Workers in France now number more than 200 and we hope to send 200 more before the end of this year. Although the maintenance of 400 workers will not be twice as great as the maintenance of 200, it is obvious that a large increase for the coming year will be required.

A gift of $5 sometimes deserves special mention even in a column in which gifts of $20,000 and budgets of half a million are discussed. The following is a quotation from a letter accompanying a recent gift of $5:—

"I have charge of a group of twelve girl Scouts about fourteen and fifteen years of age. For more than a year they have planned and anticipated earning enough money to purchase their khaki suits. A month or so ago they gave a little entertainment for which they wrote and produced an original play. It was most successful and enough money was cleared to buy their suits. I have told them something of the work in France for the mothers and children and it made an impression. Entirely on their own account they decided to give up their suits, keep a part of the proceeds for trips to the country and give the rest to the suffering children of France. It is given with all cheerfulness and good-will."

At the New York Yearly Meeting, held at Glens Falls, the Declaration issued by Philadelphia Yearly Meeting last Third Month was read and adopted.

JOSEPH ELKINTON was granted a minute to visit in Gospel service the Yearly Meetings of New York and New England. The former was held at Glens Falls, N. Y., and the latter at Westery, R. I.

HEADLEY BROTHERS, of London, announce that they expect soon to publish a series of letters written by Corder Catchpool, whilst working with the F. A. U. in Flanders, and later on whilst suffering imprisonment for conscience' sake. The book will have the title, "On Two Fronts."

The history of London Yearly Meeting, as given at the two hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the first session of that body held Fifth Month 22nd, will be of considerable interest to Friends everywhere.

The Friend (London), commenting on the occasion, in advance says:—"The fact that this body has met year after year for two-and-a-half centuries is in itself worthy of notice. It is the only governing body of a religious society, it has been said, with such a record. The first of this unbroken series was held 'at the time called Christmas' in 1668, lasting into what would now be called 1669, when 'we did conclude among ourselves to settle a meeting, to see one another's faces, and open our hearts one to another in the Truth of God, once a year, as formerly it used to be.' The decision came to by our worthy ancestors as to the holding of the Meeting has been adhered to during all the years, and the object also, we hope, has been largely attained."

DUBLIN YEARLY MEETING devoted a special session (Seventh-day after noon) to the consideration of the Peace Question, and cancelled the usual Young Friends' Excursion, for which definite arrangements had been made.

Many Friends took part in the earnest discussion; it was concluded that a minute be drawn up re-stating Friends' principles touching war, liberty of conscience, etc. At a later session the minute was submitted and adopted; it is as follows:—

"We have given much thought to the situation created by the possible application of compulsory military service to Ireland, and this has led us to consider the relation in which we stand to God and to our country.

"We hold that the supreme duty of every one of us is that he should honestly and prayerfully endeavor to ascertain what God's Will for him is, and that, having satisfied himself as to this, he should strive to obey that Will. We also hold that it is the duty of each one of us to serve our country; and in our deliberations the urgency of this duty, impressed upon us as it is by the crisis through which our nation is passing, has been fully set forth. Our ancestors, by their faithfulness and sufferings, won liberty of conscience in fundamental matters; and we cannot now acquiesce in any curtailment of that liberty. We consider participation in military service to be a fundamental matter in regard to which every person should prayerfully decide according to his religious convictions.

"While we willingly extend this liberty of conscience to those of our members who have felt it right to engage in military service, at the same time we fully maintain our adherence to the principles of Peace which our Religious Society has always held, and our belief that all war is contrary to the precepts and the spirit of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ."

APPOINTED MEETING AT MAIDEN CREEK, PA.—Fifth Month 26th was settled on as a suitable time for some members of the Quarterly Meetings'

Committee to visit our Friends at Maiden Creek and hold a public meeting, to which their neighbors should be invited. There are only three Friends' families and some half-dozen members living in that beautiful part of Pennsylvania where the clear, sweet Maiden Creek flows into the corrupted Schuylkill. Quite near to its mouth the waters of Maiden Creek are diverted to the great town of Reading.

Formerly there were many Friends in the district, but they seem to have either died or moved away, as those who come to the appointed meetings do not seem to have Quaker ancestry. They are almost all members either of the Lutheran or Reformed Churches. For that reason the meetings are appointed for the afternoon, as the people go to their own places of worship in the morning.

Ten of the Committee were present. Six had been in the neighborhood over night, enjoying the hospitality of our hospitable Friends.

There are two meeting-houses, recording one sad cause of the reduced size of the present meeting. The brick house, which belongs to our Friends, was almost full. Two years ago it was crowded. The dull gray of the day, with possibilities of a thunder-storm, may have discouraged some who otherwise would have come.

It was interesting to see so many young people and children and to teaching them the ministrations of the meeting were directed. The six addresses were very harmonious and soul-satisfying. The feeling was deep and earnest and was voiced in prayer at the end.

Some of those present expressed their sense of help from the meeting and I am sure that those of us who went from Philadelphia thanked our Friends and their neighbors for a large share in making the meeting what it was.

MOTLAN, PA.

S. W. E.

REPORT OF THE TREASURER OF THE AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE FOR WEEK ENDING SIXTH MONTH 8, 1918.

Received from 33 Meetings	$32,090.75
Received from 35 Individuals	1,328.60
Received for Armenian and Syrian	51.13
Received for Supplies	49.35
Received as Interest	3.75

 $33,523.58

 CHARLES F. JENKINS,
Treasurer.

SIXTEENTH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE ASSOCIATION FOR PROMOTING COLLEGE EDUCATION OF WOMEN.—At our recent Yearly Meeting there was much expression on the subject of the increasing need for teachers in Friends' Schools. So many of our young women are entering other fields of work that through a dearth of teachers our schools are in danger of losing their heritage of Quaker training. Much testimony was given to the great spiritual rewards of the profession and the lasting joy which the grateful affection of pupils brings into the teacher's life.

While the Association for Promoting College Education of Women does not exist solely for the purpose of preparing teachers, it does encourage those who benefit by its scholarships to enter that profession.

In Third Month occurred the death of Samuel L. Allen, an interested member of this Association from its foundation in 1901. For ten years he served as Treasurer of the Association and until his severe illness in 1911 attended almost all of the thirty meetings held during that time. His judgment was highly valued by the Association and his firm belief in the higher education of women as a preparation for all the duties of life made him a strong supporter of the objects for which this organization was founded.

Owing to the increased cost of a college education this Association has decided to offer $250 scholarships except in cases where $200 has been specified by the applicant.

The opportunity given prospective teachers to avail themselves of the T. Wistar Brown Fund when they have reached the age of twenty-one has during the past year removed the Juniors and Seniors from our list. We are hoping soon to add to the number of those who enter college.

Three renewals of scholarships for 1918-19 and one new applicant have been considered thus far.

The Treasurer reported $875, paid out in scholarships for 1917-18 and a balance in bank of $358.18.

A study of the statistics revealed that out of thirty of our scholarship women who have finished their education, twelve are married and eleven are teaching. Of the remaining seven, three are engaged in work abroad three are at home and one is a County Demonstrator in Domestic Science. Of those teaching, one is Assistant Professor in the Agricultural Department at Cornell.

Three of the married women are engaged in work with their husbands abroad, making one-fifth of the thirty engaged in missionary or reconstruction work. Eight are young women still in college.

For the Corporation and Board of Directors,

 AGNES L. TERNEY,
Secretary.

NOTICES.

FRIENDS' LIBRARY, 112 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILADELPHIA.—During Seventh and Eighth Months Friends' Library will be closed, except on Fifth-days, from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M.

 LINDA A. MOORE,
Librarian.

TUNESSASA.—About a year ago Friends responded liberally to a request for funds for a cottage at Tunessasa and for much needed improvements to buildings and equipment.

The cottage has been built and promises to be a helpful addition to the School property.

Some of the most necessary improvements have been made and they are satisfactory and very much appreciated.

In common with other institutions, Tunessasa is feeling the burden of the increase in the cost of maintenance. This is evident not only in the general household expenses, but also in the decreasing returns from the farm and dairy, due principally to the high cost of feed.

The cost of the improvements was more than was anticipated. Some not originally planned were undertaken and funds are not in hand to meet the entire expenditure.

Other repairs and improvements are greatly needed, such as (a) shingling the barn; (b) painting roof of school building; (c) piping water from spring; (d) remodeling cow stable.

The Committee has given the matter careful consideration and estimates the probable needs as follows:—

To cover deficiency for the current year to Third Month 1, 1919.	$3,000
To cover cost of repairs and improvements already made and in contemplation	5,000

 Total
 $8,000 |

The Committee does not feel justified in increasing the indebtedness of the School, and it hesitates to part with any of the limited invested funds, which would result in decreased income.

It has therefore decided to lay the situation before members of the Yearly Meeting and to earnestly request contributions to meet these expenses.

The School is in a healthy and prosperous condition. The services of Henry B. Leeds on the Reservation are valuable, and the effort being put forth at Tunessasa deserves the hearty support of the Yearly Meeting.

Remittances should be made to the Treasurer, William Bacon Evans, Moorestown, N. J., or to any member of the Committee.

On behalf of the Indian Committee:

 WILLIAM C. COWPERTHWAITTE, Clerk.
 WILLIAM BACON EVANS, Treasurer, MOORESTOWN, N. J.
 SUSAN J. ALLEN,
 J. PASSMORE ELKINTON,
 HENRY HALL,
 SARAH EMLEN MOORE,
 MARY BROWN MOORE,
 JONATHAN M. STEERE,
 EDITH THORP VALL,
 ANNA WALTON,
 S. FRANCIS WALTON,
Collecting Committee.

FIFTH MONTH 15, 1918.

MEETINGS from Sixth Month 16th to Sixth Month 22nd:—

 Philadelphia Monthly Meeting, Western District, Twelfth below Market Street, Fourth-day, Sixth Month 19th, at 10.30 A. M.
 Muncy, at Muncy, Fourth-day, Sixth Month 19th, at 10.30 A. M.
 Frankford, Fourth-day, Sixth Month 19th, at 7.15 P. M.
 Haverford, Fifth-day, Sixth Month 20th, at 5 P. M.
 Germantown, Fifth-day, Sixth Month 20th, at 10 A. M.

Founded 1865

THE PROVIDENT
Life and Trust Company
of Philadelphia

Will life be worth living at 65 ?

Doesn't it depend largely upon whether you have an income?

Look up the Provident
Income Insurance
Fourth and Chestnut Streets

H. F. BRUNER

S. D. HALL

H. F. BRUNER & Co.
COAL

OFFICE AND YARD

16 N. TWENTY-FIRST STREET
PHILADELPHIA

TELEPHONES: LOCUST 243
RACE 661

Friends Arch St. Centre
304 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Provides comfortable accommodations for guests by the day or week. Meals at moderate prices.

AMELIA D. FEATHERSTONE, Matron.
PHONE—MARKET 1071.

WM. H. PILE'S SONS

BOOK AND JOB PRINTING

422 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO THE
PRINTING OF BOOKS AND CATALOGS

GLASLYN-CHATHAM
PARK PLACE
ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

A Family House of Established Reputation.
Open Throughout the Year.

NATHAN L. JONES.

ALBERT C. RIDLEY
1714 SANSON STREET

Engraving and Printing
FINE BUSINESS STATIONERY
Wedding Invitations, Calling Cards, Greeting Cards. Die Stamped Writing Paper
TELEPHONE—LOCUST 1782

M. GATCHEL

126 N. 21st St., PHILA.

MILLINERY, PLAIN AND FANCY

Phone, Spruce 3032

POCONO MANOR INN
POCONO MANOR, PA.

SPRINGTIME in the Pocono Mountains is ever a delight to those who admire and study nature. The Birds and Flowers are numerous and varied, and the Trout Fishing in the Swiftwater is wonderful.

J. W. HURLEY, Manager
(Pocono Summit Station, D. L. & W. R. R.)

WOOLMAN SCHOOL

A Friends' School for Social and Religious Education.

Six Weeks Summer Term:

Seventh Month 1—Eighth Month 10, 1918.
Courses in Hebrew Prophecy, Teaching of Jesus, History of Friends in the Nineteenth Century, Social Service, First-day School Teaching for Children and Adolescents, The Bible in the Schools, and Internationalism.

Send for Circular.

ELBERT RUSSELL, Director,
WOOLMAN SCHOOL,
SWARTHMORE, PA.

W. B. WEAVER
UNDERTAKER and EMBALMER

550-552 N. 5TH ST., PHILA., PA.

Special Attention Given to Funerals
In and out of the City. Also Chapel
Accommodations for Funerals.

BELL 'PHONE : ESTABLISHED 1880

To enjoy good health and a sound digestion use
PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT BREAD
made from the entire wheat grain ground on a stone mill. A perfect food and natural regulator. Sold by all good grocers in Philadelphia.

Write for particulars to

PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT CO.
10th & Susquehanna Ave., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

WALL PAPERS—All Grades

Custom of Friends Specially Selected

FRANK C. BUEHL

Successor to S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON
902 SPRING GARDEN ST. - PHILADELPHIA
Store open until 10:30 A. M. Any other time by appointment only
Opposite Spring Garden Station, Phila. & Reading R. R.
ESTABLISHED 1849. BELL 'PHONE.

"FRIENDS AND THE INDIANS"

FOR SALE AT $1.50 BY

FRIENDS' BOOK STORE
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

HARRY S. LEE

313 WALNUT STREET

PAINTER AND GRAINER

ANTIQUE and OFFICE FURNITURE RESTORED

JOBING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO

ESTIMATES

IF you are satisfied with your present printer stay by him. He deserves your support. If you are considering a change see

THE HOLMES PRESS

J Linton Engle, Pres. 1336 Cherry Street, Phila.

JOSEPH G. FOGG
FUNERAL DIRECTOR and EMBALMER

S. W. Cor. Sixteenth and Race Streets

Special attention given to Friends' Funerals

Bell 'Phone : Spruce 1646

The Lakeside

Eagles Mere, Pa.

Superior location, overlooking the beautiful lake, 2200 feet above the sea level. Sailing, boating, bathing, tennis and golf. House heated by steam, elevator, electric bells, private baths, hot and cold running water in a large number of rooms. Garage. Personal management. Send for booklet.

J. S. KIRK & SON, Proprietors.

The Track of the Storm

Tales of the Marne, the Meuse, and the Aube, by Margaret B. Crook, B. A. These are inspired by incidents in the Relief Work of English Friends in this region, and are graphically narrated.

Price, bound in paper, 60c. postpaid.

For Sale By

Friends' Book and Tract Committee
144 East 20th St. New York City

WANTED—A POSITION AS COMPANION, CARE of an invalid, or as housekeeper.

Address E,
55 East Stewart Avenue,
Lansdowne, Pa.

WANTED—IMMEDIATELY—A STENOGRAPHER Will pay prevailing rate of salary.

AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE,
20 South 12th Street, Phila., Pa.

FOR RENT—EIGHT-HOUR FURNISHED COTTAGE, bath, open plumbing, hot and cold water, town and spring water. Several meals daily, half-hour ferry service to Newport and Narragansett Pier. Excellent opportunity where there are one or more invalids in family. Meals must be taken at Maplewood.
Apply DR. W. LINCOLN BATES,
Jonestown, R. I.

WANTED—A FRIEND'S FAMILY OF THREE adults would like to take charge of a house in the suburbs, during the summer, while the owners are away.

Address R. S. B.,
Care of "THE FRIEND,"
207 Walnut Place.

Cheyney Institute

offers an opportunity each year to one hundred picked colored youths to train themselves in leadership. No people have a more just claim on the sympathy and help of others than those colored people who have faith in the future of their race through wise training.

Cheyney Institute offers this training and has proved by its graduates that it merits generous support.

The Managers endeavor to administer the Trust they have assumed, but must look to Friends and others for financial assistance in the work for these one hundred young men and women.

The Institute also offers a unique course for teachers in its Summer School. Most of the Eastern and Southern States are represented at this School and testimonials of the advantages gained from the Summer courses would satisfy the most skeptical.

Leslie P. Hill, Principal, is always ready to offer timely suggestions to any who work at their hearts to assist in the laudable work that is carried on at Cheyney.

Because of the conditions which must be met, if the School is to continue its good work, the Board of Managers feel free to request Friends to include Cheyney among the charities to which they contribute, and ask that checks shall be drawn in favor of and mailed to

WILLIAM BIDDLE, Treasurer,
119 S. Fourth St., Philadelphia.

RESIDENCE: 254 S. 44th St. BELL PHONE: Buring 2084X

WILLIAM OAKES

Plumbing and Heating Contractor

ALSO LEAD BURNING

260 SOUTH TENTH STREET
PHILADELPHIA

BELL PHONE: FUBart 9066.

SEE WALKER & KEPLER

FOR

Good Electrical Work

531 CHESNUT ST. PHILA.

Philadelphia's
Representative Store

ELKINS, MORRIS & CO.

BANKERS

REPRESENTATIVES

PAUL W. BROWN
JAMES P. MAGILL

LAND TITLE BUILDING
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

RAILROAD AND
PUBLIC UTILITY BONDS

FOR

CONSERVATIVE INVESTMENT.

FULL PARTICULARS ON REQUEST.

We recommend the use of

RAG FEATHERWEIGHT

(Antique Finish)

As the paper for high-grade Books and other Publications

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE MATERIAL THAT WE SELL

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY
MANUFACTURERS
PHILADELPHIA

ALFRED C. HAINES

Building Glass and Paints

56 N. Front St., Philadelphia.

R. C. Ballinger Ernest R. Yarnall John A. Stratton
TELEPHONES

Bell—Spruce 17-81 - - Keystone—Race 637

R. C. BALLINGER & CO.

CONTRACTORS and BUILDERS

218 N. Thirteenth St. Philadelphia.

Letchworth Cottage Spring Lake Beach, N. J.

Open for the Season 1918

A. C. & S. H. Letchworth

Established 1870 :: Both Phones

Frank W. Taylor & Son

Roofers in Tin, Tile, Slate,
Copper and Slag,
Manufacturers of Ranges
and Furnaces

FURNACES, RANGES & HOT WATER SYSTEMS
installed and cared for by expert mechanics

259 S. FOURTH ST., PHILADELPHIA

Genealogist

Elizabeth B. Satterthwaite
44 N. Broad St., Reading, N. A.

Baltimore & Ohio Railroad

4 1/2% Equipment
Trust Certificates

Due serially April 1, 1921-27.

Issued under the Philadelphia Plan

SECURED by standard equipment costing twenty-five per cent. in excess of the issue.

The Company has paid dividends on its preferred and common stocks for 18 years.

Price to yield 6%

Send for Circular PF-166.

The National City Company

Correspondent Offices in 24 Cities

Philadelphia—1421 Chestnut St.

Telephone—523 Locust

Bonds Short Term Notes Acceptances

GIRARD TRUST CO. BROAD and CHESTNUT STS.

CAPITAL
AND
SURPLUS } $10,000,000

Acts as Executor, Trustee, Guardian,
Administrator, Assignee and Receiver.
Safes to Rent in Burglar-proof Vaults.
Interest Allowed on Deposits. :: ::

E. B. MORRIS
PRESIDENT

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 91.

FIFTH-DAY, SIXTH MONTH 20, 1918.

No. 51.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price $2.00 a year in Advance.

Publisher, DAVIS H. FORSTHIE.

Editors { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
DAVIS H. FORSTHIE,
MARY WARD.

Make remittances payable to
THE FRIEND,

No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

"OUT OF THE DEPTHS."

Doubtless it is the suffering nation of Israel, the typical mother of sorrows, whose cry is heard in the well-known psalm from which the above words are taken. No other people has been so often and so continuously in the depths. "Many a time have they afflicted me from my youth up, let Israel now say, many a time have they afflicted me from my youth up; yet they have not prevailed against me. The plowers plowed upon my back, they made long their furrows"—Egypt, Assyria, Babylon, Persia, Greece, Rome, Crusaders, Spain, Russia! Israel has had a long journey through the valley of weeping and she has spent more years in exile than at home.

Humanity is in that valley to-day, and her cry, too, is out of the depths. The psalms of ancient Israel—the hymn book of the second temple—have obtained a new meaning and an up-to-date application. And shall we not believe that as with Israel of old so with our own generation, as men go down into the depths they shall touch reality—they shall meet God?

Whether the psalm personifies the nation or not, the words certainly fit the lips of the individual. In every human being there are depths no plummet can sound. The soul—the real man—is a mystery, invisible as that eternal One in whose image we are made. The "whence" and "whither" of the soul remain an unplumbed deep in spite of the researches of philosophy and science.

And what shall we say of the mystery of sorrow? We stand before it baffled and bewildered as before a mighty abyss. Our perplexity is voiced in the psalmist's oft-repeated "How long?" and "Why?" Again, who has succeeded in escaping the yet deeper mystery of sin? Who has been spared the peculiar anguish of a soul conscious of an upward struggle, yet encased in a flesh with a downward tendency?

True religion has its hidden springs in this three-fold problem: the mystery of existence, of sorrow and of sin. Hence the cry of bewilderment and of penitence. The cry out of the depths proves every man at bottom a mystic, a lonely seeker after "another country," the home of his true life.

All great and good and noble things have come out of the depths. Every true poem, every genuine work of art, every high achievement, whether in the field of literature or any other sphere, if there be any blessing in it, has been born in the depths. Out of the depths came the messages of the seers of old. Out of the depths the songs of Israel, the confessions of her penitents, the praises of her saints. The Lamb whose glory will yet flood and renew the universe has fetched His light out of the depths. Fear not to go down where His footsteps have marked the way. That in the depths is God, is the confession of all who have found Him in every age.

The cry out of the depths has never been left unheard, even when it was only an unintelligent cry of pain from a broken heart, and not yet a prayer that could give account of its desires. The people of God in Old Testament times knew that they were heard; that there were no depths inaccessible to the love and pity and power Divine. But since the advent of our blessed Saviour and Lord we have a yet richer story to tell than they knew. In Christ, God has Himself come into our depths. We lift up lame hands of entreaty; but there is a mighty arm stretched down to raise us out of the mire of our heredity. By the way of the Cross God comes down to us and by that self-same way we rise to God; while by the Paraclete He comes yet closer, entering not only into our circumstances, but into our inmost being, wooing us that He might win us, and make good to us and in us all that the Cross has made good for us. Verily, "deep calleth unto deep"—the deep in man is answered by the deep in God. Our Saviour is not only a fact in history. He is a factor in experience. We know Him and are sure of Him, even as we recognize an intricate key that alone can fit an intricate lock.

MAX I. REICH.

SPIRITUAL GROWTH AND PRACTICAL ACTIVITIES.

A. NEAVE BRAYSHAW.

The Secretary of the Young Friends' Committee, in a letter to his fellow-committee members, has started us off on a useful train of thought. "How can we keep the right relation between spiritual force and practical activity both in our own life and in the life of the religious Society to which we belong? This is no mere academic question. The war, especially, has brought to light the existence (which must not be either exaggerated or neglected) of two extremes: those who emphasize the practical and seem to regard with impatience opportunities for spiritual intercourse both with our fellow-men and with God; and, on the other hand, those who are so absorbed in religious exercises that they are often unable to help the less religiously minded as much as they would like."*

I give an illustration of the mischievous playing off of one good thing against another. There are those who, seeing the terrible outward need of many, and confining both their activity and their thought to the improvement of material conditions, are impatient of spiritual considerations. In their wish to get something done they are contemptuous of those who "talk" (as they put it); the watching one hour (one hour a week!) in worship seems a waste of time for those who might be up and doing; or they are so wearied with their "doing" that they profess inability to be present at any worship at all, or to give their right help if they are present. "Get people into better conditions and their characters will improve," they say. On the other hand, there is the Low Church or Plymouth Brethren line of thought, which views with a greater or less degree of suspicion those outward activities as being short cut to that which Christianity alone can bring about. "Get people saved (or converted)," they say, "and their houses and outward conditions will improve." This thought has never made any headway among Friends and to-day it is probably unknown among us. Our danger is to rest satisfied in the other extreme which I mentioned first. We shall secure the good and avoid the evil which there is in each of these extremes only as we keep in mind two points complementary to each other and in no way contradictory, (1) that the end of all our good works must be the building up of the spiritual life of those whom we serve and (2) that those whom we serve have not a fair chance of living the spiritual life unless these outward good works are done for them. Keeping both these in mind in right balance we shall not throw emphasis against either. I do not mean that in our work we shall divide our time (perhaps not our interest) equally between the two sides, our temperaments and our ways of thought vary; my point is that whichever be the side that most attracts anyone in particular, it is necessary, both for his own completeness and for that of the work, that he show his interest in the other side and his whole-hearted recognition of the necessity for it. No good work will satisfactorily go forward unless those who are technical experts in the details of carrying it out show (as well as take) an interest in the spiritual end; but if when that end is mentioned by others, the experts retire into the background, emerging from it only when the time taken up by spiritual consideration is over, all the good which we are so energetically contriving will fall short of what it might reach. There is no depth if there comes to be an understanding that the "practical" people are not at all likely ever to say the word of prayer, or to engage in ministry, or to speak of God and Jesus Christ; or if, on the other hand, those who engage in this service are unacquainted (perhaps ludicrously so) with the circumstances of ordinary life.

*Horace G. Alexander.

It is not the last word on the matter for anyone to say that having himself no spiritual life it would for him be hypocrisy to speak of it, but that he is willing to do what he can if his service will be accepted. This attitude bears the aspect of humility and often it is contrasted favorably with that which makes open profession of working for the Kingdom of God. There is no suggestion that anyone should make profession of spiritual life or of anything else about which he has no knowledge: the point is that the performance of good works should not be accepted as a reason, even in the guise of humility, for giving up the spiritual quest. For it is, after all, spiritual healing that the world needs, and it is to the hurt of his own soul that anyone makes up his mind to cease from all reaching out after qualification for this particular service, however excellent the service which in other ways he is rendering. There is a continual drift towards shallowness, or, changing the metaphor, an ever present temptation to put up more machinery than our central power can properly drive. It is even possible that in this time of war there are some who allow their keen activity in plans for reconstruction or for relief of suffering to serve as an excuse for shirking hard thinking concerning our Christian message and testimony. From Dorchester Prison Wilfrid Littleboy writes to me:—

"The need which keeps impressing itself on my mind is for a union of social, economic and industrial ideas and spiritual values. The former is bound to exercise a great influence on life in the future, and if it is to be without spiritual life, the outlook is indeed black. Neither will the two running on parallel lines meet the case, they must be co-ordinated, run in double harness. . . . Tell any of my friends that I am full of hope and happiness and am engaged in storing up momentum for the coming times."

The danger to which our Society is continually exposed is not that of dreamy contemplativeness or, even, of indolence, but of good people having their time so filled up with good works that they forget the spiritual beginning and end. They bring help to many, they gain respect for themselves and for Quakerism in their town or village; there is no good work which has not their assistance. And the challenge may be thrown down to me, "If these people are, as you say, good, and are doing good work, what more do you want?"

"It has often been known in our time that in the multitude of philanthropies God Himself has faded out of men's lives. And so not only do they never grow themselves to the full stature of a perfect man in Christ Jesus, but they fail these whom they have made their friends just when their need is greatest. They will do anything for them but the highest thing of all.*"

These people are so busy, they have the happiness of seeing (fairly soon) the good fruits of their labors, they rejoice in the thanks and encouragement which they receive, and there seems so little reason why they should concern themselves with that which they think to be dreamy and unpractical, perhaps, even, sentimental, involving, as it might do in their case a turning aside from "getting something done." But for a long time I have been watching the effect of this attitude of mind. Almost without exception, all these of whom I am speaking are doing their good things because they have had a spiritual start or push-off into life; it is this, although they may not realize it, that has given them the will and the capacity to do good, but they are using up their spiritual capital and not leaving any to those who come after them. Or they are like slip-carriages which have been given a start and which certainly, as far as they themselves are concerned, go to where they are wanted to go (and, like slip-carriages, they are, as a rule, eminently judicious in that they are never likely to go too far); but they are getting no fresh power of their own and they give no one else a start. This is the reason why there is among us much of what I call "unreproductive goodness," i. e., goodness which does not seem to propagate itself and spring afresh in others. Thus it comes about that whole meetings which a generation ago were powerful have faded out or are now fading out. And in the town there are members of the younger generation bearing honored Quaker names who are wholly indifferent to their splendid spiritual ancestry and are not living worthily of it. The accumulated stock of family goodness appears to have been used up. This is the reason why, amid all the pressure of good work that has to be done, we cannot afford to neglect the life of prayer and of worship in public and in the home, the life which openly and avowedly stands on the side of God from whom all good comes.—From Fellowship Papers.

SAMUEL LEEDS ALLEN.

A little book of Philadelphia production entitled "Their Call to Service," depicts the lives of ten noble men of modern time, that are presumed to be in a very particular sense an "inspiration for American youth." This phrase is quoted from a notice of the late Samuel L. Allen in the public press. At least four of the ten characters selected for the book were identified with Philadelphia. In spite of defective social and industrial systems, now so much agitated, they were all able to give a large measure of world-service and out of the material of our imperfect civilization to build unselfish careers. The series of such men is a continuing one. If we turn to the past wistfully, with the old-time expression in our minds, "There were giants in those days," we are also forcibly reminded by new examples that our own age is rich in performance of a most distinguished quality. Often this performance in great enterprises seems beyond the scope of any single man's thought and work, but in reality it does rest, in the final analysis, with one individual. He may have perfected organization to the point that appears to obliterate himself. In essence, however, this self-effacement is what makes such characters "an inspiration for American youth." Consciously or unconsciously they have eliminated purely selfish ambitions and have given their lives expression in world terms.

*"Nobler Cares," George Hare Leonard.

This breadth of expression being fundamental, it usually follows that a method of performance is also disclosed which aids in giving point to the character as an example, by making it clear to others how to apply the principles of success.

Expression in world-terms and expression by a communicable process have already been pointed out in the public press as fundamental in "the call to service" of Samuel L. Allen. Some further illustrations of both these points may serve as an introduction to a brief record of the more personal side of his character. Nothing but an intimate knowledge of the working of his mind in the initial stage of experimentation with farm machinery would justify the statement that from the beginning of his career of invention he thought in world-terms. One well-known fact makes it clear that this largest outlook featured very early in his plans. Before there had been any great development of his plant one competent salesman at least, fired with a vision of the world-service of the Planet, Jr. inventions, had encircled the earth, and planted the seeds of a demand for these tools in the Antipodes. Those who were privileged, as was the writer, to hear Daniel DeCou recount the experiences of this pioneer effort to break through the millennium-long methods of crude agriculture, and to put instruments in the hands of toiling farmers calculated to increase their returns a hundred-fold, will doubtless remember two points in his exposition. He regarded the campaign upon which his brother had entered, primarily a campaign of emancipation. The toil of men under old processes had often been less than fifteen per cent. efficient. The problem set for the genius behind the scenes was to make such toil seventy-five to ninety per cent. efficient and to include in this effort not the market gardens of New Jersey only, not the crackling corn fields of Kansas alone, but the productions of the soil of every clime in every clime. The second point emphasized by this world-traveled enthusiast had to do with a fundamental of his own calling. In his judgment he was sent out for something more than to sell goods. The reflex action of salesmanship was to inform the home circle not only of the demands of the market, but of its needs. The salesman was to bring back accurate information of soils and crops and native processes, so that the service of invention should be directed in progressive lines. How well this source of knowledge was improved by Samuel L. Allen must have been apparent to many from the intelligence of his ordinary conversation. He was equally ready to give accurate information on the farming implements and methods of China or of Greece, although he had seen neither at first hand.

As to tangible results in the world-field, a very homely instance will indicate both how wide-spread they are and how revolutionary in effect they are capable of being. Some years since two Philadelphians were listening to a lecture in England by a returned missionary from India. The special subject was Famine and Prevention of Famine. Intensive farming with a variety of products instead of with one was shown to meet conditions most perfectly, and the lecturer descanted enthusiastically upon an objective performance in the sorriest famine Province. A wise missionary had realized that changed conditions of agriculture contained the key to the situation. He had instituted small holdings and by means of a line of hand implements from America, known as Planet, Jr., had taught the natives how to multiply production many fold and to provide ample store of food against the day of famine. The lecturer said he could not explain the meaning of Planet, Jr., but he was ready to proclaim that such inventions as bore this name had already proved to be an important step in the emancipation of India.

Turning from the world-service of Samuel L. Allen's work to his method of working, one comes upon a most instructive chapter of the "inspiration of American youth." The advanced education sixty years ago in the Philadelphia circle was measured by proficiency in mathematics. Such master mathematicians as Benjamin Hallowell, Enoch Lewis and the senior Samuel Alsop had made the subject of their choice a field of adventure for aspiring youth. Samuel L. Allen was of this kind and he made tireless excursions with these masters into the fields of applied mechanics and calculus. It is probably no exaggeration to say that more than any other one of the students of these teachers, he gave objective reality to his mathematical studies. Those studies were the basis as well as stimulation of his inventive genius. Doubtless his workmanship gave constant evidence of this fact, but it became patent as well to his favored companions of travel, especially where such opportunities presented as those of a transcontinental journey. At times, after a liberal flow of instructive conversation and a possible pause of reflection, he would say, "Now I think I will devote an hour or two to invention." Thereupon his mathematical instruments would be produced, a table improvised and the on-looker would have the impression from the drawings that appeared, that he was working on the demonstration of a mathematical theorem. And so he was, for each product of his prolific brain was a unity of scientific principles made to fit the complex purposes for which it was designed. Invention with Samuel L. Allen was no haphazard appropriation of stray ideas. It was a triumph over actual resources by the untiring application of right principles. In this field there is unlimited opportunity always for any who will perseveringly invest "laborious days."

Samuel L. Allen was not a mere prisoner of his inventive power. He was inexorable in the application of accurate knowledge and undoubted principles to all lines of work to which he was called. (He had no concealed impatience with the attempt made in many fields to solve problems in ignorance.) "Let us first have the facts," was his motto. His special service on numerous boards and committees was ever along this line. In the difficult domain of Social Service to which he devoted much time latterly, he was often heard to say, "I don't know enough yet for action." His whole life points to a revision of Cowper's words so as to make them say, "Knowledge and wisdom ofttimes have close connection."

We seek for the key of human character in environment and heredity. Of late the tendency has been to magnify the former influence, and to minimize the latter. It seems to be true that over-developed strains of heredity may lead to peculiarity poorly adapted to the adjustments of ordinary living. A very different picture is presented in a happy blend of hereditary gifts. Samuel L. Allen was a singularly felicitous fusion of two very distinct parental endowments. His father will be remembered as a rare combination of the plain Friend and what the French call the vivant. His constant stream of sparkling wit demanded in his hearers a well developed sense of humor for sympathetic appreciation. Where it played upon such he was the most delightful conversationalist and companion. In his son this gift was also a dominant note and was used with a restraint that was peculiarly engaging. How often was he able to resolve difficult situations and to dispel approaching storms in a hearty laugh! The key of this kindly consideration was in measure to be found in the definite heredity of his revered mother, Rebecca Leeds Allen. She seemed always to incarnate "the loving-kindness of the Lord." Her ministrations were unailing in the solitary and unexpected places. There was with her, however, no failure to give full measure of service to the more public calls of meetings and of Society at large. Samuel L. Allen also did not shrink from doing the large things that his expanded business made possible, albeit he did them with the modesty of real humility. His measure of serving others privately will never be known. This at least is true, his more private benefactions expressed a tenderness and consideration of feeling that could not have failed to suggest his mother to those who knew her. In both mother and son the background of such characteristics was a profoundly religious nature. Without any pretension whatever they sought the way of life and walked in it with sweet humility. It is ever the duty and privilege of a present age to transmit to posterity a full measure of the endowments of the past. Samuel L. Allen was signally faithful in this high behest. "One generation shall praise thy works to another, and shall declare thy mighty acts."

J. H. B.

THE CONTAGION OF FRIENDS' WAR RELIEF SEWING.

CAROLYN JONES, OF NEW BEDFORD, MASS.

One hot day last Summer a young woman, who had been reading The American Friend, telephoned to a friend and spoke of the Reconstruction work, of which she had been reading. She asked why some knitting might not be done by members of the New Bedford Society of Friends and their friends. She would get patterns from Philadelphia for making garments, and as soon as a sufficient number of articles was finished they could be sent to Philadelphia for shipment to France. Friends gladly entered upon the work, but their membership is very small in that community. Their surprise and gratitude have been great to receive help from unexpected sources, of which the following are some instances.

A woman, ninety-two years old, who lived in a near-by town, heard of the work and said, "I would like to do something for that," and yarn was provided for her and she made two very firm mufflers. Now she is making patchwork for quilts for Dr. Babbitt's hospital.

A busy woman physician saw the garments ready for a box and offered to help, saying she had spent much time in France and longed to do something for the war sufferers. She made some baby blankets and dresses, and interested some of her friends who gave several Beacon blankets.

A Catholic woman, who had sewed for one of the Friend workers in her home, asked about the work. After hearing what it was for, she offered her services for one afternoon a week, and often takes home garments to finish.

The members of the Masonic Order of the Eastern Star wished to do some work "such as the Friends were doing," and they appropriated a sum of money, bought patterns, and materials and are still busy making garments to be used by the Friends' Unit.

The Dorcas Society heard of the work of Friends and they gave two full layettes of dainty and useful articles.

The wife of the organist in the largest Episcopal Church in town offered to give materials and to do something because she wished to help the work of the Society to which her mother belonged in New York State.

The ladies of the Sewing Society of the First Christian Church heard of Friends' work toward providing garments for poor children in France and now they use a part of their materials to make such things.

A girl, who was making a baby afghan, took her knitting when she went to call on an invalid friend in a neighboring city. The invalid asked what she was making and when she was told, languidly remarked, "I think I could do that." In a short time she sent a beautifully made baby afghan and her nurse wrote that the interest aroused had done her patient more good than any medicine.

Friends have a meeting in the adjoining town of Dartmouth. Their members have worked very faithfully with the New Bedford Friends, and they have been generous in financial help, both as individuals and as a meeting.

Purposely the words "heard of" have been used in these instances because, while they did not realize it at the time, the accounts of work done by the F. U. given by enthusiastic Friends, have been a valuable means by which a small group of people has been able to send about 900 articles to the Friends' Service Committee, although their own attendance only averages from thirteen to fourteen workers. Best of all is the understanding sympathy with the principles of Friends shown by the co-operation of such widely differing people.

LETTERS OF FRANCIS W. PENNELL.

(Continued from page 676.)

The "big house" (to adopt a Southernism) here is a one-story many-roomed structure, which partly encloses a garden-court, in the centre of which is a pool and fountain. Over the estate are about sixty houses, some of adobe, most of guadea (native heavy bamboo) and small and floorless. The door is usually the only entrance and chimneys are never seen on such houses.

Meals are three (or four) a day, as in Bogota and elsewhere. Desayuno is first, for me, a painfully light breakfast of a cup of chocolate with corn bread (made from maize, but whitish, heavy, I suppose unleavened). Desayuno I usually piece out with fresh fruit, of which more later. Almuerzo is anywhere between twelve and two, a much more substantial meal, the main meal of the day. Then we have first soup, of plantain, potato, yucca or like starchy ingredient. With this we usually drop in some fresh alligator pear, rather insipid, I think, but good in soup. Sliced orange follows soup instead of preceding. Then the first course proper, consisting certainly of rice and something. Then the second course of meat, plus vegetables, the latter usually being potatoes, yucca, plantain and maybe arracacha, these all dry. Lastly comes the invariable finisher, some "dulce," something exceedingly sweet. Usually it has been cidra, one of the citrus fruits, like, I suppose, candied lemon-rind might be. Excepting that I must add the meal ends (so yet after this) with coffee, and coffee here is very good. Perhaps about five or six we will have (1½) tea and wafers. Then about eight in the evening is Comida, much as Almuerzo, but less, but one main course.

Señors Mallarino and Vega are both young men of about my age, and both speak English. I am surprised how well Vega speaks, considering that he has never been in an English-speaking country. Mallarino's mother is English and he has spent much time in Europe. They keep "bachelor's quarters" here. A brother of Mallarino's is here, and there have been frequent guests, but still because this is but a young venture on their part and they have not established homes, this is not such a real picture of another type of life as was my week's stay in Louisiana.

My room is a corner room, well lighted (as ever here by doors, not windows), I think it the pleasantest in the house. It opens on the wide porch which runs completely around the house. And just beyond this porch is a group of orange trees which yield large delicious oranges more rapidly than we can eat them. I have never feasted so on oranges. Two other trees supply us with fruit and are equally near. These bear apotes, a green top-shaped hard-rind fruit. You break the rind and eat the orange pulp which surrounds the large seeds. This is toughish and adheres to the seeds, so you get what you can, sucking so long as seems worth while. The taste is sweet, but the peculiar flavor I like. The tree bears its fruits in the same peculiar fashion as the chocolate-tree, not on the small twigs, but on the old wood of the main limbs. This makes them very easy to pick.

I reached here with Señors M. and V. the eleventh of this month. We came on horse-back the easy day's journey from San Lorenzo. On the thirteenth I started for the Paramo del Ruiz, the high mountain of this Cordillera Central, to ascend which I came here. M. and V. planned to go with me the first day's ride to Murillo. José left early in the morning with a cargo-mule, on which I had the tent, cot, provisions for a few days, and paper for specimens. With this M. and V. placed a small bundle of the necessities desired for a night's stay in the colder clime of Murillo.

It was reported to be but a three hours' ride from Libano to Murillo; in fact, Vega had once actually ridden it in three and a-half hours, so we did not make much haste in the morning. I should have preferred hurrying on to be sure of safe arrival, my botanical interests also drawing me to the land higher up. But Mallarino was just returning from several month's absence in Bogota, and Vega wanted to show him all the plantation, so far and wide over the estate we rode and only gradually the three or four miles toward Libano. Then when we did start, unexpectedly it began to rain and it was over a bad trail that we reached Libano for almuerzo. There we found had been scarcely any rain, so we felt encouraged.

After almuerzo, and, for my impatience, entirely too much delay in Libano, we did get under way at about two p. m. Soon it began to rain and this continued through the afternoon. The camino, the highroad between San Lorenzo and Manizales in the Cauca country, is of course dirt, and our course was steadily up-hill. A camino, as I have often explained, is a trail, the main ones fairly broad and much traveled, the arteries of traffic between different cities. This was a leading camino, but still one which a little rain made simply frightful. I took with me a horse, apparently a fine willing animal, which M. and V. had with them at the time for pasture. I soon found that for this trip he had not sufficient strength. His first complete down was in one of the worst mud-holes I have ever seen. In that I had to get off and lead him, and frequently after that. At last darkness came and found us still an hour's travel by good road from Murillo, certainly several hours' through much mud. Had I been alone, even then I should have pushed on, being jealous of the time, my two beasts together costing me for each day three dollars. But the wisest course was certainly to stop, although the prospect of a night in a wayside dwelling, our things being with José far in advance, was anything but cheerful.

Mallarino found a house with wooden floor, and some appearance of cleanliness, and there we got something to eat—I forget just what, but certainly something very plain, there never is any variety in the peon's fare. We had a fair-sized room to ourselves. This contained for furniture one bed, and in the corner were some of the thin pieces of matting used by peons for their beds. (These make one thoroughly comprehend the expression, "Take up thy bed and walk.") There was, I fear, not the purest generosity in the insistence with which I urged upon my companions their taking the large and more comfortable bed; I felt that the matting would certainly be much freer from insects of the night. So I think it proved; at least upon the mat upon the floor, only a light blanket and my water-proof over me for protection, I was surprised at how much rest I got. My poor companions seemed to have much better prospects, but reported in the morning, between the fleas and the cold (we were high enough for a much colder climate), an entirely sleepless night. However, I think that sleeping on the hard floor the discomfort would have been even greater for them.

Next morning we separated, I making an early start for Murillo so as, if possible, not to lose the day. It had cleared the evening before, but before morning was again raining. It took more than three hours' hard work to reach Murillo, and when I got there my horse was so tired that I did not wish to take him further through such a camino. So at Murillo I tarried most of the day. It was a dismal wait, absolutely nothing to do but to watch the clouds and to speculate upon a clearing which seemed never coming. But before dusk the rain stopped, the direction of the clouds changed, and to my joy I saw them blowing from the Cordillera. I reasoned that it was the clouds from the lowland, warm, so capable of holding much water, which on striking the cold of the upland produced the rain; once the direction of air reversed and no rain. The logic surely correct and fully confirmed. It was clearing at sunset.

(To be continued.)

THE FLIGHT INTO EGYPT.

"He led them also by a straight way that they might go to a city of habitation."

Thou wayfaring Jesus, a pilgrim and stranger,

Exiled from heaven by love at Thy birth,

Exiled again from Thy rest in the manger,

A fugitive child mid the perils of earth,—

Cheer with Thy fellowship all who are weary,

Wandering far from the land that they love;

Guide every heart that is homeless and dreary,

Safe to its home in Thy presence above.

HENRY VAN DYKE, in "Christ in the Poetry of To-day."

[The following letter from The Friend (London) is written with an English audience in mind. May it not find appropriateness with us this side the Atlantic as well.—Eds.]

A FRIENDS' MEETING, BY A FRIEND CRITIC.

As a constant attender on First-day mornings at an important meeting of the Society of Friends and as a minister of another denomination of some thirty years' standing, I should like to place on record some of the impressions that have remained,—a record that is made in no spirit of criticism, but rather of observation. Throughout many years I have attended frequently at Friends' meetings; the absence of all formalism and the fellowship of silence appealing to me irresistibly; but when, having resigned my church, I found myself free for many First-day mornings running, I have had a greater chance as a silent listener to gauge the spirit of what was said more thoroughly.

I am impressed with several things, and one of the most prominent to my mind is the thing that has been missing, for at least six months, both in the vocal prayers and ministry—I mean the absence in either to any reference to sin. It may be, and, if it is so I stand cap in hand to Friends—it may be, that generations of high-purposed living have produced a type that is only conscious of the positive claims of the culture of righteousness and has no "man-in-the-street" consciousness of sin, personally. I think that is the explanation; but whatever is the reason, there is the fact. The prayers and ministrations have either been altruistic in tone, touching on public duties and necessity of public witness, especially at this war period, or they have been exhortative in the lines of some thought culled from the treasure-house of Scripture. I have thoroughly enjoyed them; but I could not help wondering whether, if a man or woman soul-struggler had come into that meeting, either would have found any hint of a fountain open for sin and uncleanness; and, as I imagined that that was the very raison d'être of the Church of Christ, I wondered.

The Roman Catholic Church knows of nothing else. All its services and its organizations aim at dealing with sin and sinners, interceding for them, hearing their confessions and re-presenting (in symbol) an atoning sacrifice. But here, at the other end of the denominational scale, was a body of men and women who met Sabbath after Sabbath for six months and never so much as mentioned the great Fact of Sin or of Salvation from it. This occurs to me as strange, for in a thirty years' ministry I have found that great Fact of Sin lurking and powerful in the lives of many consecrated souls; and it is evidential in the writings of Bishop Andrews, Samuel Rutherford, John Bunyan and many well-known saints. In very truth, the higher the soul seems to rise, the deeper seems its consciousness of hindrance. The Master Himself speaks to His disciples, not the world, about taking heed to themselves, lest at any time they be overcharged with surfetting, drunkenness and cares of this life and the lusts of other things. He also mentioned directly and indirectly seventy temptations to which disciples would be exposed. Has the need for flashing the red light danger signal that He flashed disappeared?

Had I gathered with these Friends thirty years ago when I was a young man of twenty, I should have found nothing to really help me. The ministry was on such experimentally advanced lines! The truths unfolded were the experiences of middle-aged and even grey-haired religion.

"It is better to write one truth than volumes in which truth is not."

If this is not particular to one meeting, is it not a serious thing; for the hope of development lies in the young people, and a body that ignores them is bound to dwindle? I have passed my life writing for and thinking for children, believing that they hold the Future in their keeping, but no young person has had any share in the ministry and intercession of one meeting for six months, to my certain knowledge. The one person, who when he exercised his vocal ministry, did seem to come measurably near to an evangel to sinners, was approached and informed that his ministry was a hindrance to the rest. Is there no room for the exercise of any but the teaching office of the Church amongst Friends?

These are only impressions. But I cannot express my personal debt to the vocal ministry and intercession that voiced my own experience and spoke to it and from it. Thinking of my own gain, I am "glad of it," but remembering that the men and women of fifty like myself are passing, I am "sad of it;" for it means that if this meeting is typical, the Friends cannot woo the sinful soul and cannot influence the young ones.

C. H.

WITH THE CHILDREN IN FRANCE.

The following is from a city daily:—

"In collaboration with the local dignitaries we got up a big fair in Lyons to explain American ideas of child welfare. For perhaps the biggest thing that France has to do is to see to it that the next generation comes along as it should, and they are rather behind us in some ways when it comes to the conservation of the health of the poor. They realize it themselves and have asked the Red Cross to help as well as it can. It seemed a rather uncertain kind of thing to do, but Doctor Lucas, who is at the head of the children's bureau, persuaded the council to give him a little money to get up this baby show at Lyons. Everybody said, 'What's the use? The French have their own way of doing and they won't come near a show that simply shows what America thinks ought to be done, especially during the war, when none has the time or interest for other things.' But Doctor Lucas stuck to his show, with a result that has astonished the French themselves. Day after day, the crowds stand in line, thousands of them even in the rain, to get into the place. It really is rather fun. There is an American who demonstrates giving clean milk under a doctor's prescription to little babies, with the home-made ice box and sterilizer. There is a glass house inside the main building in which real babies are washed and weighed and fed and sleep, with the eyes, literally, of thousands of poor mothers with their babies in their arms glued to the windows, or rather walls. There is a kindergarten behind the ropes, where real children do their play and work with a teacher without even looking up at the multitudes squeezing in to see them, because they are so interested in their school. There is a real American Red Cross dentist who teaches gangs of boys to brush their teeth and does all their dentistry right before the eyes of the crowds that cannot be kept outside the ropes, so curious are they.

"All sorts of people come and study the place that you would least expect to see. There always are some nuns and Sisters of Mercy studying with all their eyes and ears. All the schools are taken there with their teachers, and it is explained in detail, the teachers saying all the time, 'Now, remember, this is what you are to do every day without fail.'

"Outside is a real children's playground, with swings and sand boxes and games, all under supervision like ours at home. It is the first thing of the kind for the benefit of the public that has ever been tried in France. At first the parents would not allow their children to go in. But now they cannot be kept out, and the only difficulty is that the parents want to go in and play, too! It is extraordinarily interesting, because the French boys have never played together. They don't know what 'taking sides' means. It is always every last boy for himself and against all the others. But while it is hard for them to learn, they are having the time of their lives. It is rather interesting that a good part of the play is directed by the Quakers. Everywhere I go, whether up to the front or down to the baby show at Lyons, I always find the Quakers, and they are always the hardest-working, simplest, most modest crowd on the place. They rarely do the big spectacular things. So they are not so much talked about as they should be. But when you get down to the people on the ground, who know what is going on, you find everybody from top to bottom blessing the Quakers."

A TIMELY CAUTION FOR CHRISTIANS.

We must now practice more assiduously than ever, the fundamental virtues of our faith, mercy, brotherliness and kindness toward the stranger within our gates. . . . A second thing all Christians can do, is to take heed to our ways that we sin not with our tongue.

These are exciting times, and it is easy to say things which had best be left unsaid. We must be patient with one another. A thousand vexing tangled questions will come up for discussion, and all of us possibly cannot think alike. The only sensible thing for us to do is to do our own thinking, and let everybody do his, without our pouncing on him because he does not happen to agree with us.

Blessed is the man who gets through this war without needlessly wounding acquaintances and friends by the cruel strokes of an unruly tongue.

There will be enough wreckage at the end of the war without our adding to it a mass of ruined friendships. Let us do our utmost to maintain a cordial fellowship with our fellow-Christians whose opinions are farthest from our own, and by extraordinary self-control, refrain from saying things of which we shall be ashamed when the world is calm again. The world is torn by many demons, and we cannot afford to increase the fever and distraction by our impatient temper or our bitter tongue.—CHARLES E. JEFFERSON, in Christian Work.

DAVID F. PEARSON.

David F. Pearson entered into rest at his home in Pasadena, California, Third Month 28, 1918.

He was born in Miami County, Ohio, Fourth Month 4th, 1839, and removed with his parents to Springdale, Cedar County, Iowa, in 1853.

He was a life-long member of Friends and in early manhood found rest of soul in believing in Jesus Christ.

In 1863 he was united in marriage to Annie, daughter of the late Doctor George and Rebecca Michener. Their married life was filled with love and service for the Master, with constant watchful care for their six children, with hospitality to their friends, and with help and kindness to those in sickness or in need.

The tenderly loved wife and mother entered the eternal rest almost eleven years before the summons came for him.

The last fifteen years of his life he was an invalid, enduring intense and almost constant suffering; but through the sustaining love of his Heavenly Father he was enabled to bear the helplessness and pain with such perfect patience and sweetness that those who came in contact with him could but marvel. As long as strength remained a smile of welcome greeted all, and through all these years the loving watchfulness and devotion of his large family were beautiful, touching and inspiring.

His integrity, broad-mindedness and good judgment made his council often sought and a life-long friend wrote: "He was one of the best men I ever knew. His example and influence were for the noblest in character and life, and have been a blessing and an inspiration to me. Surely the risen Christ has revealed the glory of the light of eternal morning to him."

THE YOUNG FRIENDS' SUPPLEMENT

Vol. 1.

FIFTH-DAY, SIXTH MONTH 20, 1918.

No. 4.

THE YOUNG FRIENDS' SUPPLEMENT.
A MONTHLY SUPPLEMENT TO THE FRIEND.
DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF YOUNG FRIENDS.

Editor—EDWARD W. MARSHALL.

Associate Editors.

JANE MOON SNIPES

IRVIN C. POLEY

EDITH STRATTON

ALICE TRIMBLE

EDITOR'S ADDRESS—20 SOUTH TWELFTH STREET, PHILADELPHIA.

PUBLISHED UNDER THE AUSPICES OF
THE PHILADELPHIA YOUNG FRIENDS' COMMITTEE.

WHAT WOULD YOU DO IF AN ENEMY ATTACKED YOUR WIFE?

[The following anonymous contributed article is so clear and helpful that we are placing it on the editorial page in order to give it a conspicuous position, although it was not written by an Editor.—Eds.]

This type of question—so familiar now-a-days—is important for it is invariably employed by the militarist in defending his position against the Christian whose loyalty to Jesus involves a reliance upon spiritual rather than physical force. If in reply to the question you hesitate and find it difficult to say just what you would do, does it follow that you are an inconsistent coward and that the basic principle upon which you act is false? If it does, then by the same token the militarist's position becomes untenable. For there are circumstances when military duty would cause the militarist to hesitate and to find it difficult to say just what he would do should his wife be brutally attacked.

Suppose, for example, that the country is invaded and that the defending army is in desperate straits. The only thing that will save the day is a message that is being carried by a soldier. On his way he sees his wife about to be brutally attacked by one of the enemy. What should he do under the circumstances? Certainly the military code places the duty to deliver the message above everything else. And if he is loyal to his military doctrine he must abandon his wife to her fate and deliver his message. Of course, the decision to follow this course will not be made without a terrific mental struggle. He will be torn between conflicting emotions. Natural instinct bids him place the defense of his loved ones above every other consideration—and instinct may triumph. If, however, he really believes in his military doctrine, instinct will be subordinated. He does not arrive at this conclusion because he fears court-martial and a deserter's death; for he would gladly give his life to protect his loved ones. He arrives at the decision because deep down in his heart he believes that if he delivers the message his country will be saved and the victory that will come to his cause will bring permanent peace. But in the process he has apparently played the part of a despicable coward and has interposed nothing to hinder the brute in his immediate purpose. What would the militarist say if we should condemn his doctrine because it involved such hideous sacrifice? He would properly reply that the problem must be viewed as a whole and that the result in this particular instance did not prove anything as to the validity of the military method.

Now the problem that faces the Christian who cannot fight and whose loved ones are attacked, resembles closely that which we have described above. The Christian believes fundamentally that the only way by which such appalling disasters as this war may be averted is by the triumph of the forces of good-will over the forces of hatred and physical violence. Therefore, in the face of a brutal attack he may be forced to the conclusion that he and his loved ones must rely upon spiritual forces and, if need be, suffer to the utmost in order that the eternal principle which is to save the world may be upheld. This conclusion will not be reached without a terrific struggle against natural instinct. And as in the former instance, instinct may triumph. It is these conflicting emotions which render it difficult for the Christian to say just what he would do in the face of the attack. And if the militarist condemns the Christian method because it apparently offers no immediate resistance to evil, the Christian will reply that the problem must be viewed as a whole and that the result in this particular instance does not prove anything as to the validity of the Christian method.

The whole problem turns upon the ultimate conviction deep down in the heart as to which method is eternally true. On the one hand is the doctrine of reprisal, of an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth. If the enemy uses poison gas, we will use poison gas more deadly still; if he bombs our women and children, we will bomb his women and children. And so hatred piles upon hatred, horror upon horror until the end is too awful to contemplate. On the other hand, is the method of Jesus, "Overcome evil with good." "Love your enemies." If necessary, sacrifice yourself and your all as He did, to drive home the message of love and good-will. Apparently the cause may be lost; but in the end the method will triumph. The victory will be won, not by the destruction of the enemy, but by the transformation your method will have wrought in him. In view of the appalling results of the present war of hatred and reprisal, the Christian method is worthy of a trial.

(The above article derives its inspiration from an answer made by a C. O. in England when questioned by a military tribunal.)

THE AIMS AND IDEALS OF THE YOUNG FRIENDS' MOVEMENT.

In writing to me a few days ago, the Secretary of our Young Friends' Committee said of the Young Friends' Movement:—"Being a spiritual movement rather than an organization committed to a limited task, it knows no bounds but finds its denominational consciousness merely for the sake of "losing" itself in the consecration of a powerful group rather than of isolated individuals to the unprecedented need of the world."

That is the principle on which our Young Friends' Committee has gone,—to be a spiritual movement within the Society of Friends rather than an organization claiming an allegiance of its members apart from their allegiance to the Society. Our aim is to make young Quakers better Friends.

Why, then, should we wish to hold these younger people in our Society? Surely not for selfish reasons. Not for the sake of the Society merely, for it is as true of denominations, as it is of individuals, that they who seek to save their lives shall lose them. It is, I believe, because we are convinced that the Society of Friends has a great mission. As I see it, that mission is to keep spiritual religion alive in the world. In theory at least our religion is essentially one of the spirit.

Take, for instance, our form of worship. In meeting houses, beautiful only in their simplicity, with no appeal of music or set service to our senses, we gather on the basis of silence to worship our Father in spirit and in truth. We believe that in the silence of all flesh His Spirit speaks to us and we to Him, so that though no human word be spoken we go away with new strength and vision.

There are in reality but two ultimate types of religion:—There is one which trusts in human forces and agencies, the omnipotence of the human reason and intellect, the omnipotence of human creations, which counts its success in numbers and social position and wealth, and rests its defense on submarines and poison gases, on destroyers and big armies. The other type trusts in the power and ultimate triumph of spiritual forces,—trusts in God,—and in its attempt to bring the Kingdom of God to a sin-sick and war-racked world, will use only those methods which God Himself uses in his dealings with us,—never-ending faith, never-dying love, and never-tiring service.

Most religious denominations attempt to combine both of these types of religion, with what success or failure we know too well.

Now, if the Society of Friends has any mission at all it is to bear unflinching testimony to the power of spiritual religion. But alas, we are in grave danger of failing in this mission. We have many of us ceased to be actuated by the spirit of our forefathers, we have gone after strange gods. Business and social success, wealth and material comforts, the esteem of our fellow-men, these have become our chief aims, we have become selfish and spiritually dead. We have perhaps a form of godliness, but too many of us have in our lives denied the power of being like God—of godliness. The material is crowding so close upon us that it chokes and smother our spiritual lives. We must all be conscious of this.

"What art thou?" said Marcus Aurelius in his soliloquy, "A little soul carrying a corpse."

Gilbert Murray has recently pointed out that the great duty of each of us to-day is "to see that his own soul does not die. It will sometimes stagger under the weight of the corpse it carries; that is inevitable. Only let it not fall into the power of the corpse. The weight of dead matter seems, at times like the present, to increase upon us. Our whole being is dulled. We do more and more things because we are driven, fewer and fewer because we choose them and love them; we cease even to suffer as we should suffer, or to pity as we should pity.

... We tend to shrink from the higher emotions because they are difficult, to sink into the round of lower and more commonplace emotions because they make less disturbance in our daily business. The power of death is abroad over the world. It has taken lives innumerable, and better lives than ours. Let those of us whose bodily life is still spared make sure that the soul within us shall not die."

Unless we as individuals keep our souls—our spiritual lives—very much alive there is no hope for the Society of Friends. It can only be a spiritual force in the world as its individual members are spiritual. Like any living organism it dies when the cells composing it are dead. And we are in danger of spiritual death unless we are striving daily—yes, hourly—to follow in the footsteps of our Master, unless we cease to look upon God as merely a present help in time of trouble, an auxiliary engine to bring us to port through the storm after we have given a free sheet to our selfish desires and suddenly find ourselves unable to weather the storm under our own canvas.

How then are we to increase our spiritual strength? How can we keep our souls alive? Let me make just a few suggestions. We must first realize that we are all more or less spiritually dead. Like the prodigal we must first come to ourselves and see how far short of our high calling we have come. And then again like the prodigal, we must go to our Father in prayer. I believe that one of the great weaknesses of our lives is due to our failure to take time to be alone with God. We are so busy with the myriad activities of the day,—good though many of them are,—that we constantly fail to go apart, climb the mountain, as it were, and lay our problems, our difficulties, our perplexities, our failures, before God and ask Him to make our way clear before us. And as He answers each one's prayer may we say with Whittier:—

And, as the path of duty is made plain,
May grace be given that I may walk therein,
Not like the hireling, for his selfish gain,
With backward glances and reluctant tread,
Making a merit of his coward dread,
But, cheerful, in the light around me thrown,
Walking as one to pleasant service led;
Doing God's will as if it were my own;
Yet trusting not in mine, but in His strength alone!

It is no easy task in these days to walk the path of reliance on spiritual forces, when the material world is crashing around our ears, when the one thought in the minds of most is "Win the war regardless of the cost, though that cost be the loss of our own souls." It is so easy to lose faith. We are so few, so unknown. But let us remember that "one with God is a majority." We are convinced that we have a message to a world. We know that the only permanent cure for the present world agony, when it seems as though all humanity were in its death throes, is in our Lord and Master, Jesus Christ.

ONLY THROUGH ME!

Only through Me! . . . The clear, high call comes pealing
Above the thunders of the battle-plain:—
Only through Me can Life's red wounds find healing;
Only through Me shall earth have peace again.

Only through Me! Love's might, all might transcending,
Alone can draw the poison fangs of hate.
Yours the beginning! Mine a nobler end!—
Peace upon earth, and man regenerate!

Only through Me can come the great awakening!
Wrong cannot right the wrongs that Wrong hath done:
Only through Me, all other gods forsaking,
Can ye attain the heights that must be won.

Can we not rise to such great height of glory?
Shall this vast sorrow spend itself in vain?
Shall future ages tell the woful story—
Christ by his own was crucified again?

—JOHN OXENHAM.

We must then prove true to our trust of emphasizing in the world the great need of spiritual religion. We can do this only as we ourselves, in a strength not our own, know more and more what it means to be led by the Spirit. We shall often falter and fail, but let us never turn from the quest. The forces opposed to us may seem like granite promontories against which our little waves beat in vain, but it is not so. If those waves, small though they be, are blown by the breath of the spirit of God, they will ultimately wear away even granite walls. So long as we do not become discouraged or turn from the quest, so long as we keep our eyes fastened on our goal and press toward it, we may be sure that we shall at length be victorious.

HAROLD EVANS.

"BROTHER in Hope, if you
Should ever pierce our empyrean through,
And find that perfect star
Whose beams I have not seen, yet know they are,
Say that I loved it, too,
But could not climb so far."

—ALLAN UDEGRAFF.

WHY FRIENDS' SCHOOLS ARE NECESSARY AND WHAT IS NECESSARY FOR FRIENDS' SCHOOLS.

Friends have never done so much thinking as they have done since the outbreak of the war. Many have been re-convicted of the soundness of their traditional attitude that all wars are wrong; but this new conviction has come after severe self-questioning and it is right that it should, for there is something base in a pacifism that comes easily.

Due, perhaps, to some extent to the inspiration of the Fellowship of Reconciliation, we have also examined more closely the social order of which we are part and frequently we have had to plead guilty to violation of Christian principles in times of peace. We find that few of us are careful to deal only with stores approved by the Consumers' League. We have most of us learned the folly and selfishness of buying peace of mind by handing a few pennies to beggars, or of giving to the bread-line or soup-society type of charity. We forget that this obligates us to give at least as much to the family-rehabilitation work of such organizations as the Society for Organizing Charity.

And in the process of examination, we have acquired a new faith in democracy, but we question the extent to which we are living it out. Those who are interested in education have wondered whether it is really democratic to have private schools.

Fundamentally, it seems to me that there is no place for a private school unless it is doing better work than the public school or doing something the public school does not do so well. The latter, controlled by the State and aiming to turn out a standardized product, cannot in the nature of things pay much attention to individual differences; but a private school cannot, broadly speaking, justify its existence unless it can show results in personality and character.

The special opportunity of Friends' schools seems to me the emphasis that can be put on the religious and ethical side of life. Surely our schools have been demonstrated unsuccessful if their graduates do not show by action the possession of a social conscience. The schools should, I think, stress Christianity and not Quakerism, which is but one expression of it, for here, too, the ever-amazing truth holds about losing your life in order to gain it. About the school there should be such evidences of freedom of conscience, tolerance, sincerity, simplicity, genuine courage and patriotism, that no one would doubt these Christian ideals to be important to Friends. It is interesting to remember that in all the criticism of Friends in regard to their attitude on war, the pupils in their schools have been almost unanimous in their faith in the loyalty and integrity of Friends. This attitude was due to a large extent, I believe, to the effort of many teachers to show their admiration for the much that is idealistic in those endorsing the war, and, if they are Conservative in Friendly circles and radical outside Quakerdom, to express their sorrow at not being at one with a president and a country that we can all love and admire. The children thus in many cases become invaluable supporters of Quakerism in homes that are frequently prejudiced and even hostile.

An interesting experiment in genuine patriotism was worked out in one of our larger day schools. An alumna of the school who was at that time head of the Germantown division of the Society for Organizing Charity, spoke early in the year of five children who were unable to go to school on account of insufficient clothing or food. She told each child's story in the hope that one or two classes would volunteer to "adopt" a child. To her delight and everybody's, the names of more children were asked for, as seven classes elected to take over the expenses of one child each. There had already been collections for Christmas dinners for the poor and for Armenian relief, but each child pledged himself to about ten cents weekly, which he was encouraged to earn for himself. In several cases there was genuine sacrifice involved. One boy who had fifteen cents a week, expressed it rather amusingly, "I suppose I can give ten cents; I guess I can live on five cents a week."

The treasurer and his assistants had an especially valuable experience in what civic responsibility may mean.

The function of Friends' schools must be then, in my opinion, to turn out as many socially-minded, trained leaders as possible. Although this is an aim in most schools, it has been rather a conspicuous success among Quakers,—enough to justify their schools from the point of view of the community.

From the point of view of our Society, the right kind of schools seems to me the best way of keeping alive Quakerism, and, better still, the things Quakerism stands for. Those of our schools which are not as good as the public schools should be brought up to standard or be discontinued. Those which are now ahead of them cannot stand still, but must fulfil the private schools' function of serving as experimental or model schools for the public schools to emulate. In either case, money will be required both for increased physical needs and teachers' salaries.

We do not expect our doctors to pay for the humanitarian nature of their business by meagre salaries and, if barriers exist in the form of too low salaries, the most gifted people are apt to yield to the persuasions of their friends and families and stifle the teaching impulse. For most Friends, although they approve of good schools as a general proposition, do not wish men relatives of whom they are fond to take up teaching. They realize that, although the salary may for the first few years keep the same or even better than that of a young man of equal ability and training in other work, the financial returns from teaching will not bear comparison later. The T. Wistar Brown Fund for teachers in Friends' schools and the Teachers' Retirement Fund are encouraging beginnings of greater interest among Friends in education throughout the entire Yearly Meeting. Are endowment funds the next step in financial encouragement to good teaching and good school equipment?

More important even than bigger salaries at the top is a spread in respect for teaching as a profession. Young men who are teachers have almost always to overcome a prejudice with the average layman; they are suspected at first of having taught because they could not do anything else. As soon as people realize that teaching is an art of limitless possibilities, that no human being will ever be big enough to do it as well as it might be done, then will the difficulty of the work begin to cast its spell on those to whom difficulty is a challenge.

If we really want our schools to be places where children may learn to love sincerity and simplicity and tolerance and democracy, we must acquire something of the attitude toward teaching of Ellwood Hendrick, expressed in his article on Science in the Humanities in the Fifth Month Atlantic Monthly. "I venture to say that the great problem of schools is to find teachers who have the art to teach. This requires the quick perception, the deft understanding, and the persuasiveness of the professional gambler, who must arouse the cupidity of his victim and put his suspicions to sleep. The teacher must arouse the curiosity of whomever he would teach, and, by subtlety of wit, find an entrance into his understanding. Of such are the teachers of a better day than ours. It seems to me that teaching is the greatest of the arts. . . . I am convinced that, if we would grow in grace as a people and wax great in understanding and develop qualities of sympathy that throw a light on the road toward the Kingdom of God, we must first glorify the art of teaching."

IRVIN C. POLEY.

THE SIGNIFICANCE OF THE C. O.'S POSITION.

AN EXTRACT FROM A LETTER.

" . . . The fact that the only thing a modern state can do with a fine spirit like this is to set him at killing his fellow-men, or, when balked in this, to shut him up behind steel bars and try to brutalize his spirit, is one of the strongest indictments of militarism and the civilization which has produced it.

"Norman Angell put the whole case concretely in describing the status of the thousand conscientious objectors who are sentenced to hard labor in Wormwood Scrubbs Prison in England. "After a long process of elimination, England discovered one thousand absolutely honest men, and she put them all in jail."

"The real significance of the position of the conscientious objector to war is this: It is the turning-point from which will come, first, the questioning and then the revolt against the unlimited authority of the State. According to the present theory, a man surrenders his individual conscience to the State when he takes the military oath, so that if he is ordered to sink the Lusitania or to shoot down non-combatant women and children, he has no choice but to obey, and is personally absolved from all guilt; but like the absolute authority of the Roman Catholic Church over men's consciences, the unlimited authority of this new god, the State, that we have set up, will be overthrown; and the protest of the conscientious objector marks the beginning of this moral revolt and the dawn of a new world order.

"I do not fear the physical consequence of _____'s stand; at the worst it will not compare with the maiming and crippling and killing of thousands of young men who believe as he does, but do not have his moral courage. Nor do I feel anxious about the misrepresentation and abuse of the press and the short-sighted jingo and militarists—history will amply justify him. What I do hope and pray for is that militarism may not be able to brutalize his spirit or crush his principles, for this is the only way he can be defeated on the great moral issue involved."

SHOULD I "SPEAK" IN A FRIENDS' MEETING?

There seems to be among young Friends a growing interest in our meetings for worship, and an earnest desire on the part of many to be of real service to the meeting. Several articles have recently been published in THE FRIEND or THE SUPPLEMENT on the subject of our Ministry and how it can best meet the needs of our membership. Many helpful suggestions have been given and various phases of this important subject have been considered. The early Christian conception of a religious service being held in the power and under the leadership of the Holy Spirit is still the ideal. But the relation of the Holy Spirit to one's "speaking" in meeting has not been very fully treated.

Why, when, and how should one "speak" in a Friends' meeting, are practical questions facing us all. The following statement is humbly given as a conviction based upon what the author believes to be the truth according to God's will as revealed in Scripture; not as based upon any degree whatsoever of attainment by experience, which is liable to error.

The distinguishing characteristic of a Friends' meeting is that it is planned to be a time for "a waiting, spiritual worship" and the exercise of "a free Gospel ministry"—under the personal direction of the Holy Spirit. This means that it is an "open" meeting, and if "done decently and in order," anyone who "feels called" may speak. In order to be clear in our thinking, it may be well for us to determine what we mean by being "called" to speak. What is the purpose of the Holy Spirit and how may we truly recognize His leadings?

The Scriptures which refer to the Holy Spirit make clear that He is the Third Person of the Trinity. It is His office to witness of Christ, the Son, and reveal the Will of God, the Father. In the simplest analysis of Scripture passages which refer to this truth we may say that God, the Father—wills; God, the Son—works; and God, the Spirit—witnesses. So, in a meeting for worship, the presence of God is manifest by the witnessing in or upon our hearts by the Holy Spirit—our Comforter. He may speak to us through a passage of Scripture, especially illumining it by His Light—convicting of sin and a need of repentance; or perhaps more directly He may speak through the Still, Small Voice. To those who know Him, He may lead into prayer, silent or perhaps vocal.—the prayer of thanksgiving, penitence, personal petition or intercession. He will meet the needs of those who wait upon Him,—whether it be for comfort in sorrow, patience in distress, strength in temptation or power in witnessing. When a group is thus united in vital personal communion with God's Holy Spirit,—there is "a living silence," and the spiritual life of those thus exercised is greatly deepened. If, however, the silence of a meeting be only a physical quiet, and minds are busy thinking about human and material relationships, then the Holy Spirit can not operate and a "dead silence" results. If the silence of a meeting is to be broken by speech, it must, theoretically, at least, be done, only at the immediate personal prompting of the Holy Spirit. If one thus "feels called" to speak a message from Him, and that one remains silent, then the Holy Spirit is "grieved." Or, He may be "grieved" by speaking which is not from Him and according to God's will. Just "good thoughts" or earnest exhortations concerning ideals of life, from the "natural mind" may still leave the meeting spiritually "dead." Robert Barclay warns against such ministry—by saying, "But surely God is not glorified, but greatly dishonored, when natural men from their mere natural ability, meddle in spiritual things, which they neither know nor understand." (R. B. obtains this truth from the Spirit's message in I Cor. ii: 11-14, and Romans viii: 6-11.) The unbeliever, or one who has not been "born again" by the "waters" of repentance and forgiveness, and the "spirit" of regeneration, should not endeavor to testify concerning spiritual matters. But he who has "become a new creature" by putting his faith and trust in Jesus Christ and experienced the operation of His Holy Spirit; that person should have a knowledge of spiritual truths and be willing and glad to witness to what he has experienced, if so led by the Spirit. Why, then, should one speak in meeting? Only because he is impelled by the Spirit of God, to speak the things he has seen or heard from Him.

We next may ask, "When am I to know the Holy Spirit requires a message of me?" One's feelings can not be a guide, in any such religious matters. But the listening ear of prayer and the clear eye of faith,—with the will completely yielded, will apprehend the mind of the spirit. One must question carefully whether the thought or "message" under prayerful meditation is for the meeting or only for the individual. And is it to be given by "me," and is it to be given now? If the Holy Spirit gives no "stop in the mind" and it is apprehended to be His will through these tests then the message should be given,—looking to Him for utterance.

Finally, how shall I speak in meeting, if I am called to witness for my Lord? The message should be direct and to the point, and given in a natural straight-forward manner. It should pertain to life, to everyday life and its relation to eternal life. It should touch some relationship to Jesus Christ,—some phase of morality or religion which touches Jesus as Teacher, Master, Saviour or Lord. Whether the message is the fact or the promise of inspired Scripture, the simple heart-felt testimony of experience, the appropriate simile, or the earnest exhortation,—it should testify of God's grace (His unmerited favor to man) and His ability to meet the needs of all men through Jesus Christ. What other message can be worthy of the Holy Spirit?

The ministry of the Apostles, and also of the early Friends, was concerned with personal relationships between a holy, righteous and loving God, and sinful, wayward man. They preached the regeneration of the individual and through him the reformation of society. The world-to-day needs another revival of Apostolic Christianity—a personal "Christ-consciousness" dominating the whole life.

The Friends' meeting, we believe, is an ideal place and manner wherein to worship God,—provided we know Him by personal experience. Is not the object of this "waiting, spiritual worship"—to know Him, to become conscious of His presence, and to live in His power." Time spent, and a ministry directed, towards this object will pay dividends for all eternity. To be "in spirit and in truth"—it must be by the personal operation of the Holy Spirit Himself.

WM. H. RICHEL.

EACH IN HIS OWN TONGUE.

A fire-mist and a planet,
A crystal and a cell,
A jelly-fish and a satirist,
And caves where the cave-men dwell,
Then a sense of law and beauty
And a face turned from the clod,
Some call it Evolution,
And others call it God.

A haze on the far horizon,
The infinite, tender sky,
The ripe, rich tint of the cornfields,
And the wild geese sailing high;
And all over upland and lowland
The charm of the golden-rod,—
Some of us call it Autumn,
And others call it God.

Like tiles on a crescent sea-beach,
When the moon is new and thin,
Into our hearts high yearnings
Come swelling and surging in,
Come from the mystic ocean
Whose rim no foot has trod—
Some of us call it Longing,
And others call it God.

A picket frozen on duty,
A mother starved for her brood,
Socrates drinking the hemlock,
And Jesus on the rood;
And millions who, humble and nameless,
The straight, hard pathway plod,—
Some call it Consolation,
And others call it God.

—WILLIAM HERBERT CARRUTH.

NOTES FROM JAPAN.

YOUNG MEN'S BIBLE CONFERENCE AT HAYAMA, JAPAN.

T. E. JONES.

I suppose the term Bible Conference connotes to most young Friends, a Silver Bay, Northfield or Westtown gathering. One rejoices to remember such feasts of friendship, information and inspiration. I am going to tell you about a conference slightly different from any of these and yet as rich in blessing. Indeed, I think this gathering ranked even with or surpassed any I have attended.

Look on a map of Japan for Tokio; now follow down the left side of Tokio Bay to the peninsula at its very mouth. On the left side of this, facing the large bay and the ocean beyond, is the little village of Hayama. It is nestled among the high pointed hills which drop immediately down to the water's edge. In a two-story Japanese house on a hill which looked straight across to snow-capped Fuji beyond the bay, fifteen lively Japanese fellows were housed for a week of Bible study and fellowship. This was one of the conferences for young men which Horace E. Coleman has arranged once or twice each year, since taking charge of that work eleven years ago. I may say as an aside, that Horace Coleman has stamped his life and that of the Master upon the hearts of these men in a manner most difficult for them to forget. All are deeply sorry that he is leaving the Mission, but glad that the large work of the International Sabbath School Movement in Japan has claimed his services.

The gathering lasted just a week and cost the whole sum of $1.75 per person! How is that for keeping down expenses? We ate Japanese food except for a little bread, nuts and jam which H. E. Coleman and I had. Then each had his "futon" or Japanese bed. It is spread on the floor and is rather similar to the old-fashioned "pallet" we used to sleep on when too much company took the children's beds. They were comfortable, too, and most convenient to move when we wanted the room for study or recitations the next day.

Some of the fellows brought mandolins, violins and a book of American popular songs. On rainy afternoons and at odd moments we made the air ring with "Old Folks at Home," "Old Black Joe," "Annie Laurie," etc. It was great! One felt himself back at Woodbrooke, the Kent Tramp, Westtown or Cedar Lake. Riddles, juggling and jokes aided to weld us all into a fellowship ready to enter real Bible study and Spiritual Research.

A day's program was somewhat as follows:—6 A. M. The rising alarm, usually some one's loud call. 7.00. Morning prayers. 7.30. Breakfast. 8.00. A time for meditation, personal conference or letter writing. 9.00. H. E. Coleman gave spiritual glimpses into the Old Testament. He spoke of the Creation, the temptation, Abraham and the early history of Israel. 10.00. Herbert Nicholson, who attended the conference for two days and really started it off, gave some spiritual messages on the book of Hebrews. He was followed during the latter part of the week by myself with an analysis of 1 Corinthians.

The afternoons were usually taken up with walking excursions into the hills or along the sea. One day, three of us got a boat and rowed from Hayama about two miles across the neck of the bay to Kamakura. To wield a long Japanese sweep instead of oars is an experience in itself. The walks often furnished opportunities to talk with the students which resulted in great spiritual blessing. Rainy afternoons we spent indoors as described above.

After supper in the evening we usually gathered about H. E. Coleman who led us in reading the book of Job and the story of Joseph. At this time he endeavored to point out the certain failure of sin and the triumph of righteousness. These stories really seemed new to me as we read them in rotation, each one explaining his own passage.

The climax of the conference was reached on First-day, "Easter Sunday." At this time the thought of dying out to sin and being reborn in Christ was impressed upon us all. In a powerful message that evening Horace Coleman explained the spiritual meaning of Christ's coming again.

No one can estimate the value of a gathering such as this. No one knows what it means for a young man to consecrate his life to God. Every one present did this more fully than ever before and two or three decided for the first time to become active Christians. One who is a Unitarian said, "My stony heart has been softened." The following is a letter of appreciation from one of the students which will indicate the feeling of others:—

"I have for a long time been vexed by the question why God our Heavenly Father makes many temptations before us. Is He not our dearest Father? And He lays temptations before His children. But now the great question is clearly solved by H. E. Coleman's teaching. Innocence does not become virtue until it is tested and proved by temptation.

"The most impressive of the many teachings of H. E. Coleman were as follows:—1. Sin is not God's creation, but man's. 2. Most of the pains and ills of life are results of some one's sins. 3. Man must learn in the school of pain and toil the lesson of obedience. 4. Man is the free agent. God surrounds him with good influences, but does not remove from him the possibility of committing the most heinous crimes. 5. God patiently endeavors to point out to the offender the right way and to influence him to follow it. God's mercy to the guilty is infinitely greater than that of man. By these teachings we can't help realizing that God is extremely the mercy itself. We should not complain to Him about pains, but to ourselves. It is not He, but we ourselves that annoy us. "We were taught by T. E. Jones the most practical items. They are too many to recall here. But 'the human body of great value,' 'problem of bodily defilement,' 'Christian family,' and 'Paul's sonnet of love' are especially impressed on my mind. We were taught the most necessary, the most hungry problems of man, which no other teacher dared to explain to us before. Indeed, we must first know and then we can solve, and can advance. I thank him for it with all my heart.

"From H. Nicholson we were taught the real meaning of victory. The real victory is in the mind. However neglected, forgotten, evil spoken of, ridiculed or offended we are never disheartened by the will of God. No food, no raiment, no climate, no society, no interruption can dishearten us when we are fortified by the will of God. We can get victory in the place of the unknown. God knows.

"It was the first time for me to have such a pleasant, meaningful, noble week in Hayama. The great ocean, stretching far and wide, and the sublime figure of Mount Fuji outdoors, and the God's voice through our dearest teachers indoors. By these my life of last week was a strength great to me. I must advance forward on the foundation of the power. I sincerely thank you, our dearest teachers, for your earnest delivering of the mind of God.

"Yours faithfully,

"S. KOYANO."

BRIEF VISITS TO THREE FRIENDLY CENTRES.

It was a great privilege during Fifth Month, in connection with a business trip, to be able to make stops at Barnesville, O., at Friends' University, Wichita, Kans., and at Penn College, Ia. All three visits were my first and the impressions gathered should be shared with all Philadelphia Young Friends. At Barnesville, the hospitable greeting from "Master" Wetherill Hutton made things seem familiar and recalled happy days at Westtown when he as Governor looked after us so faithfully. Those who remember him there as a bachelor will appreciate the readjustment of impressions necessary on finding him now accompanied by his small daughter of two-and-a-half years and later, in the bosom of his family, as a happy father entirely at ease in domestic matters.

Stillwater Meeting-house, at the entrance to the School, will be familiar to many readers of THE SUPPLEMENT. The campus is pleasing, though simple, and I was impressed with the completeness of the buildings. The children, about sixty in number, nearly equally divided between boys and girls, and the five teachers, had an enjoyable sociable Seventh-day evening, after which there was an opportunity to talk to them about our Peace Position and the Philadelphia Young Friends' Work. Meeting First-day morning in the remodelled meeting-room, dinner in the School dining-room, and a further talk with the boys who collect in their dormitory parlor after dinner, followed in close succession. It was a pleasure to meet Charles Livezey in the afternoon and to discuss the situation of the boys in camp. The simplicity of life and character represented at "Olney" we much need in Philadelphia, and I hope we of Philadelphia may prove worthy of the more intimate association of the Young Friends' of Ohio Yearly Meeting whose interests centre at Barnesville.

The following Seventh-day noon found me before the high stone steps at the entrance of Friends' University, Wichita. The huge building has an extraordinarily interesting history. It is said to be the largest educational building under one roof in the world and I should think it might be. Kansas Friends wisely have used but part in proportion to their needs and finances, and Professor Henry C. Fellow, who was my cordial host and guide upon arrival, showed me the some twenty rooms and the great future assembly-room still unfinished inside and inhabited only by pigeons and bats.

The Christian Church started the place as Garfield University in the days of the "Wichita boom." They spent nearly $200,000 and surely built substantially. The "boom" collapsed, the mortgagor took the property, and interested Friends later bought it, and gave it to Kansas Yearly Meeting, the Friends' University beginning its career in 1868. The students have been averaging about three hundred in number, somewhat reduced since the war began. Perhaps a third are members of the Society of Friends. One looks ahead fifty or a hundred years and imagines here the beginning of a great western educational institution implanting into the citizens of Kansas and Oklahoma the sound foundations of learning and character.

By the best of luck for me who should be on hand but Robert Tatlock, passing through with his lecture on Reconstruction work in Russia. After having missed him continuously in Philadelphia it was a treat to join him as President Stanley's guest for dinner, where the problems of Quakerism were vigorously discussed.

First-day morning the challenge to build Christ's Kingdom in the institutions of world's life was presented to the men's Bible Class of perhaps forty men of various ages. The University building serves the local Wichita meeting as well as the needs of the college. This opportunity and the Young People's Christian Endeavor meeting in the evening naturally were more to the liking of a Philadelphia Friend than the morning meeting which received a typical "Mother's Day" sermon. It was an able discourse, but to one accustomed to the greater spontaneity of an eastern Friends' meeting, the emotions which arose in one's heart were largely offset by reflections on the professional preparation of the sermon. However, a great deal that was said was excellent advice and we must honor the sincerity and unstinted faithfulness of these Friends, mostly young men in the strength of life, who devote themselves to work of their meetings, accepting in return exceedingly meagre incomes.

Professor William L. Pearson kindly invited me to lunch with him and thereafter we soon got immersed into theological differences among Friends. I could but respect his absolute conviction that "conversion" is an instantaneous event, even though unconscious. We got along sympathetically, however, and we who are situated where "Young Friends" are given every opportunity that is good for them, must be touched with tender sympathy for older Friends, whether in Philadelphia or in Kansas, who see the younger generation going in a way of life and thought different from those which the elders ones approve.

One day's contact, of course, can yield but a meagre understanding of any Yearly Meeting situation, but my impression is that the younger and middle-aged Friends of Kansas and those graduates of the University who are represented in the Alumni Association, place more emphasis upon strength of personal character than upon any specific theological process. One anticipates that the first quarter of a century after the war will find Friends' University taking strides ahead under the guidance of a group of strong young men and women. There is something appealing about the great U. S. A. territory in the Southwest and I hope Philadelphia Friends will bear Kansas Friends closely on their minds, attending Kansas Yearly Meeting and visiting the University at Wichita as often as "way opens."

Third-day, the 14th, after a morning's slow travel from Des Moines, found me at Oskaloosa, Ia. Some of us came truly to love our dear Friend, Clarence Pickett, at the Westtown Conference last year. He is now "pastor" of the meeting at Oskaloosa. With him and his wife the afternoon was spent until train time in the evening. Coming thus from the older building at Friends' University, the new buildings of Penn College were quite in contrast. Some one must have worked hard to collect the $300,000 to build the new main building, girls' dormitory of most modern type, and power house, just open this year. Everything was alert and progressive. Any intellectual or theological crises, I judge, have been passed, and Penn is in shape to serve Iowa Friends for many generations to come. I did not have time to meet with college students or other Young Friends, but as far as possible left the greetings of our Philadelphia group. This I trust can be extended by our group at the Earham Conference this Summer.

J. PASSMORE ELKINTON.

MEN must be silent thinkers before their words and deeds can have either great beauty or wide influence.

THE WESTTOWN CONFERENCE.

When this number of THE SUPPLEMENT appears, the Westtown Conference will probably be in session. The program seems very attractive and well-balanced, and judging from the interest already manifested, the Conference should be very much worth while.

In addition to the splendid addresses scheduled, the Bible classes and devotional periods which are the spiritual backbone of such a conference, the two forums to be held deserve mention. One of them, that on the "Second Coming of Christ" will assume more importance at this time because of the recent conference on the same subject held at Philadelphia.

The next issue of THE SUPPLEMENT is to contain a lengthy report of the Westtown Conference, together with some, at least, of the addresses given, so that the impressions and ideas gained, and the spiritual atmosphere which is present at such a time may, so far as possible, be preserved in print.

YOUNG FRIENDS AND INDIAN AFFAIRS.

In response to invitation, a number of Young Friends recently met with several members of the Associated Executive Committee of Friends on Indian Affairs, to discuss plans for arousing in Young Friends a greater interest in Indian Affairs.

The meeting was both interesting and informing to those of whose knowledge of Indian affairs is mostly gained from the Tunesassa report at Yearly Meeting. The American Indian appeals to our sympathy and interest not only because of his romantic past and the wrongs done him by the white man, but because our Society has occupied a unique position in the management of Indian Affairs in this country, as described in Rayner Kelsey's book, "Friends and the Indians," which Young Friends are urged to read.

According to Rayner Kelsey, Indian work is the oldest missionary enterprise of our Society. We are sorry to learn that more than ever before this work is made difficult because of the introduction of the white man into Indian settlements and the scattering of the Indians, both of which are becoming more pronounced as time goes on.

The Indian work presents a real opportunity and a real task to Young Friends to carry out Christ's injunction to spread the Kingdom. The difficulties which have arisen make the challenge that much more insistent. A committee of Young Friends was appointed to bring the matter to the attention of Young Friends, to enlist their interest and support, and to encourage them to visit the Indian settlements in Oklahoma, at Tunesassa and elsewhere, and see first hand the field which is so much in need of more trained Christian workers.

E. W. M.

END OF THE YOUNG FRIENDS' SUPPLEMENT.

STATEMENT AUTHORIZED BY THE WAR DEPARTMENT, AND TEXT OF THE ORDER OF THE SECRETARY OF WAR IN REFERENCE TO CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTORS, MAY 30, 1918.

[Note.—The following might have been published two weeks ago, but was anticipated by messages from the offices on Twelfth Street and Fourth and Arch Streets. Doubtless all our readers have the essential facts of Secretary Baker's ruling, but as a matter of record and for reference we think it but fair to place the whole statement in THE FRIEND.—Ems.]

Orders have been issued by the Secretary of War providing for the segregation of conscientious objectors at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas. Men refusing either to perform military service or to accept the alternative of duties classed as non-combatant will be transferred from their present camps after being interrogated personally by a board of inquiry.

The Secretary has appointed as members of this board Major Richard C. Stoddard, of the Judge Advocate's Office, Chairman; Federal Judge Julian W. Mack, of Chicago, and Dean H. F. Stone, of the Columbia University Law School, New York.

Special provision is made by which objectors, who are held

NOTES FROM THE YOUNG FRIENDS' GROUPS.

West Grove.—We are glad to welcome another addition to the growing list of Fellowship in our vicinity. The Young Friends of Western Quarter have recently organized into a group and hope to report some regular form of study or other work shortly.

Haddonfield.—Since Yearly Meeting the Haddonfield Fellowship has organized and held several successful meetings. During hot weather the activities will largely be limited to out-door gatherings of some sort. Next fall, however, the Fellowship hopes to take up the study of Quakerism, which has appealed to the group as a good starting-point.

In deciding upon this subject it was felt that the inspirational rather than the purely historical side should be emphasized. The group wishes to learn more about the wonderful force which stirred the souls of those early Friends and kept them steadfast to the promptings of the Inner Light in spite of prison, violence, and unspeakable hardship and abuse. As a result of the study of such a subject, the group itself might possibly feel to some degree the power of that force working in their midst.

A LETTER TO THE EDITOR.

CARE AMERICAN RED CROSS, White Bldg., Seattle, Wash., Fifth Month 28, 1918.

DEAR FRIENDS:—

I have just had the pleasure of talking with Red Cross executives in several large cities, both East and West. Their one call is for trained workers, case workers. They are using all the volunteers they can get and are glad of their services, but they really need men and women with actual experience.

The demand for trained people will increase as the nation's problems multiply. Quakers are fitted by natural upbringing to be case workers. Our homes are managed in a kindly way. Our meetings reflect this kindness. Social work wants it. But we should be trained to use our background to its best advantage.

A case worker is not made in a day. To help a family solve its difficulties, which is what ease work is, if we give it a broad and simple definition, takes experience. I spent one term at the New York School of Philanthropy, and one Winter in the New York Charity Organization. Both organizations give splendid training. I should like to urge all Friends who are looking forward to service which we may render to our fellow countrymen with our whole heart, to make that service better by attendance at the New York School.

The Registrar has assured me that inquiries will be very welcome. Hence I urge every one interested to address Katharine Fowler, 109 E. Twenty-second Street, New York City, N. Y.

Thine sincerely,

RICHARD CABURY, JR.

to be sincere in their attitude, may be furloughed without pay from the Government for agricultural service. These men must agree not to accept for their labor a greater sum than the pay of a private plus subsistence.

Conscientious objectors, though their numbers have been relatively small, have presented a problem to the War Department and the present instructions are based upon several months of study.

Among some of the objectors an impression prevails that they may in the near future be discharged from military service and relieved from responsibility to the Government as a result of their attitude. Such is not the fact and under no circumstances will this action be taken in the case of men otherwise competent to perform military service. Their rights of individual conscience will be respected, but in justice to the soldiers who are willing and anxious to risk their lives in defense of the right, men refusing to perform any service whatever under the provisions of the Selective Service Act cannot expect to avoid the responsibility for an attitude which is shared by only an extremely small proportion of their fellow countrymen, much less expect to receive any privileges not accorded to others.

The Selective Service Act makes provision for the assignment to non-combatant military service of members of religious bodies opposed in principle to war. In certain instances the church in question specifies that obedience to any military order, whether given by a company commander or by a surgeon in the hospital, involves a departure from the tenets of the church, and in many cases individual objectors have stated that the same conclusion prevents their accepting the alternative of non-combatant service offered by the terms of the Presidential Order of March 20th. For this reason the new instructions have been drawn in such a way as to provide the greatest generosity of treatment to the men whose sincerity is proved, while keeping the strictest check against giving an opportunity to the slacker or malingerer.

THE TEXT OF THE ORDER BY SECRETARY OF WAR.

1. The Secretary of War directs that instructions substantially as follows be sent to all commanding officers concerned:

1. By the terms of the Presidential Order of March 20, 1918, men reporting at the training camps under the provisions of the Selective Service Law who profess conscientious scruples against warfare are given an opportunity to select forms of service designated by the President to be non-combatant in character. By direction of the Secretary of War, dated April 22, 1918, instructions were issued by this office, April 27, 1918, to try by court-martial those declining to accept such non-combatant service: (a) whose attitude in camp is defiant; (b) whose sincerity is questioned; (c) who are active in propaganda.

2. All other men professing conscientious objections, now segregated in posts and camps, i. e., those who, while themselves refusing to obey military instructions on the ground of conscientious scruples, religious or other, have given no other cause or criticism in their conduct and all who have been or may be acquitted by such courts-martial shall be transferred, upon orders issued by this office to camp and other commanders, to Fort Leavenworth, Kansas. The Commanding Officer, Fort Leavenworth, will keep these men segregated, but not under arrest, pending further instructions from this office.

3. The same procedure shall be carried out as promptly as possible in the cases of men professing similar scruples who may report at posts or camps in the future.

4. Under no circumstances will conscientious objectors otherwise qualified to perform military duty be discharged from their responsibilities under the Selective Service Law, but the Secretary of War has constituted a Board of Inquiry, composed of a representative from the Judge Advocate's office (Major Richard C. Stoddard), Chairman; Judge Julian W. Mack, of the Federal Court, and Dean H. F. Stone, of the Columbia University Law School. It will be the duty of this board to interrogate personally each man so transferred. Such men as may be determined by this Board to be sincere in their attitude and desirous of serving their country in any way within the limits of their conscientious scruples may be furloughed by the commanding officer, Fort Leavenworth, without pay, for agricultural service, upon the voluntary application of the soldier, under the authority contained in the Act of Congress of March 16, 1918, and the provisions of General Order 31, 1918, provision being made:

(1) That monthly report as to the industry of each person so furloughed shall be received from disinterested sources, and that the furlough shall terminate automatically upon receipt of report that he is not working to the best of his ability; and

(2) That no person shall be recommended for such furlough who does not voluntarily agree that he shall receive for his labor an amount no greater than a private's pay, plus an estimated sum for subsistence if such be not provided by the employer. It is suggested that any additional amount which may be offered for the service of such men be contributed to the Red Cross.

5. In exceptional cases the Board may recommend furlough for service in France in the Friends' Reconstruction Unit.

6. If there shall be any instances in which the findings of courts-martial at camps or posts in cases involving conscientious objectors shall be disapproved by the Secretary of War, the men concerned shall also be transferred to Fort Leavenworth, and similarly examined and reported upon by the Board of Inquiry.

7. Any man who is not recommended for furlough by this Board, or who being offered such furlough shall refuse to accept it, or whose furlough shall be terminated for the reasons indicated above, or for other reasons deemed sufficient by the Secretary of War, shall be required to perform such non-combatant service as may be assigned to him and shall be held strictly accountable under the articles of War for the proper performance of such service and to strict obedience to all laws governing or applicable to soldiers employed in that status. In the event of disobedience of such laws or failure to perform such service, the offender shall be tried by court-martial, and if found guilty and sentenced to confinement, shall be detained in the Disciplinary Barracks for the term of his sentence.

8. Pending the final decision in each case as to the disposal of these men, the directions as to their treatment issued from time to time by order of the Secretary of War remain in force. Those may be summarized as follows:

As a matter of public health every man in camp, entirely apart from his military status, shall be expected to keep himself and his belongings and surroundings clean, and his body in good condition through appropriate exercise. Men declining to perform military duties shall be expected to prepare their own food.

If, however, any drafted man, upon his arrival at camp either through the presentation of a certificate from his Local Board, or by written statement addressed by himself to the commanding officer, shall record himself as a conscientious objector, he shall not, against his will, be required to wear a uniform or to bear arms; nor, if, pending the final decision as to his status, he shall decline to perform, under military direction, duties which he states to be contrary to the dictates of his conscience, shall he receive punitive treatment for such conduct.

No man who fails to report at camp, in accordance with the instructions of his Local Board, or who, having reported, fails to make clear upon his arrival his decision to be regarded as a conscientious objector, is entitled to the treatment outlined above.

In the assignment of any soldier to duty, combatant or non-combatant, the War Department recognizes no distinction between service in the United States and service abroad.

11. That the Commanding General, Central Department, be instructed to advise the commanding officer, Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, in accordance with the foregoing, and direct him to take the necessary action for the reception and segregation of these men, and to co-operate with the Board of Inquiry in disposing of their cases.

LETTERS FROM FRANCE.

LEWIS GANNETT

He was a Quaker who had been doing reconstruction work in the war zone. He was only eighteen years old, and he'd been working day and night helping the refugees—for the last three nights he had not slept at all, as he had been taking a trainload from the danger zone to Brittany, and he was very tired and talked slowly as if he were reviewing horrors in a dream.

"I didn't know anything about it until I went out into the road that morning, and saw them coming; the road streaming with people and camions and carts and cars and chickens and everything all mixed together—just a mass moving down the road.

"When I looked at them, at their set mouths, and the sort of desperate look in their eyes—I—well—I nearly went off my head. I was at Esmerly-Hallon—these people were coming from Ham. We hadn't heard a thing—of course, we knew things were grave, but then when one lives in a war zone, everything is grave, but I never dreamed. . . . Not until I got up in the morning and went out and saw them—I don't know what I did—I only know I found an English officer's car. I don't know what I told him—I only know I was in the back of his car, clenching my fists and trying to keep from yelling—bound for headquarters. There they told me.

"We got to Montdidier—I don't quite know how. You go just as far as you can, you know—you feel things up to a point, and then you can't feel any more—I got hard—hard. I didn't think at all after awhile. I just worked—nothing mattered—I didn't feel. You don't feel after a while."

He was all slumped together in his chair, and as he talked he stared at the floor blankly.

"When we got to Montdidier, I worked with the Smith College girls and the American Red Cross men who had taken a school-house there and established a refuge where they gave us all hot drinks and soup and food.

"Then we were told there were too many refugees in Montdidier—some must go. One train went out with 1000 in it. It was pretty hard getting any organization—things were so mixed up; there was some food, but it wasn't easy to take care of so many, so quickly.

"The next train-load was about 500. These were all people of my villages—and the villages thereabouts—Grecourt, where the Smith College girls were, of Ham—and all the people I knew; and you know." He looked up squarely, but a little shyly—

"I love those people—when you live among them as long as I have—you get to love them.

"Oh, yes, I was building roofs, but somehow, that never counted very much for me—I'm not much of a carpenter. I take too long between nails thinking about things. And you know, I never thought that all that building was the real thing about one being there. It was the other thing, the coming into close touch with the people—the something they gave us and we gave them. They loved us, you know, and they still do—that is the amazing part of it. Somehow—we managed to give them such hope that they are planning now on getting back again, and they have perfect faith that we are going to be the ones who will get them back.

"Some of those people have been evacuated three times—I don't know how—and really it's marvelous—their spirit, I can hardly understand it. It was very rare to find anyone who was crushed by it.

"Almost immediately they began to ask me questions about whether I thought they could get another baraque when they came back, and how much a baraque like the one the 'Lenois' had would cost them, and how soon I thought they could get back—heart-breaking questions. It was that hope we'd given all, that counts, I think, and the spirit of love that we had helped to foster.

"Well, I just couldn't see those people I'd worked with so long and loved so much going off alone. They didn't know where they were. So I just went along. I didn't have any papers and no time to get 'em in, but I went just the same.

"I took us twenty-four hours to get to St. Brieuc in Brittany—our destination—though we didn't know it. At different cities along the way we stopped, and the prefect had food and hot soup brought down to the train for us, but it was a long ride.

"But they are all right there. The French and American Red Cross have taken charge of them. So I left and came back to Paris.

"I came just fired with that idea that I must get right back to Montdidier to help all the rest of my people. I felt that I had sort of a sacred charge to do it from those I had just left. They had such faith in me that all their friends would be safe if only I went there to take care of them. And that is the thing we have done for them.

"I went from Paris to Troyes where there are great numbers of refugees, about seven thousand, and it was there that I had my first experience with them. There was a young American at the Troyes équipe (he and I had a great many mutual friends at home) and it was with him that I served my Troyes apprenticeship. He was doing his monthly collecting (you see the furniture, etc., is sold on the installment plan and regular collections are made for the money). I thought it was going to be a horrid job and that people wouldn't want to let us in, but I found myself quite mistaken. We were received everywhere with smiles of joy—the money was practically always forthcoming and the visits were not at all affairs of business, but pleasant social meetings.

"An interruption—four little refugee children, whom I stumbled upon by accident yesterday,—are peering in at the open window. I found them in an ancient chateau, really a chateau with three square towers and two wonderful old carved stone fire-places built way out into the rooms. The place, a den of dirt, and no mattresses on the iron cots—'lits de soldats,' where the baby was lying asleep. And after my visit one of the little girls followed me, running after me with a flowering wall-flower in a tin can which I had left in their home,—the one pretty thing there. They are sitting before me as I write,—eating chocolate while I finish my letter. But, I've lost my thread,—I shall not be able to write more now. Will go off with the children and finish later on—

"Later on—I'm afraid this is a very disconnected letter, but hope it is better than none at all, and I find that almost all my letters are written in sections. I went back to the chateau with the four children and took the occasion to go thoroughly through their quarters, two iron cots without mattresses, and covered with rags, a tiny stove, a broken chair and an old wardrobe and a small round table. These in the room in which one of the great fire-places is and where a baron once proudly held state. All the children (five girls, one a baby unable to walk, and two boys) sleep on the floor. I saw one blanket. How did they ever get through the winter? They came from Rheims and underwent thirty-one bombardments before coming here, and think of that little generous thing running after me with her plant,—the only pretty thing she had.

"At the house to-day I noticed a tiny flower-bed of about a foot in diameter, planted with little field daisies and the oldest girl said she had made it. They have no ground at all of their own, as their house is quite in the midst of market-gardens (belonging, I suppose, to the townspeople.)

"I must tell you of another tragic family that I came upon two days ago. They were in a little stone hut by the roadside,—a tiny passage inside and two squalid rooms. The woman who told me she had no clothes beyond what she wore, had varicose veins which she showed me, probably also in deference to my Red Cross. By the way, I'm afraid I do not often correct the misconception, as I find myself listened to very respectfully when I suggest air and sunshine, and I have actually had people get up and open a window at my suggestion—a great achievement in France. The woman told me that her husband was mobilized, her oldest son a civil prisoner in the invaded section of France. One of the boys, a little chap of four or five, was going blind, and held his head down all the time. Another little fellow of eleven, I think, looking eight, scarcely had strength to stand upright, and lay, all the time I was there, across a bicycle which stood against the wall—he looked decidedly ill. And a little girl whom I did not see, never stopped coughing, her mother told me. I saw another boy with staring eyes, under-nourished and ill, like the rest of them,—the family diseased through and through. The woman has had fourteen children and seven of them are there in the hut where I saw her. They are the most painful case that I have seen, the poor little chateau children are, by some miracle, strong and well."

IN HAWAII.

WILLIAM C. ALLEN.

In the middle of the Pacific Ocean are the beautiful Hawaiian Islands. There the stately mango, the scarlet flowered poinciana, the big-leaved breadfruit, the tall cocoanut palm swing in the tropic breeze. There are charming drives between the lofty mountains and the coral-fringed sea. But to the lover of humanity all these sink into insignificance in comparison with the racial concord discovered in this land.

One morning recently I was in the first grade room of a public school in Honolulu. It was presided over by a Hawaiian teacher and there were fifty-eight children in the room. In front of me stood little Russians, Americans, Filipinos, Koreans, Spaniards, Hawaiians, Japanese, Chinese, Portuguese, Porto Ricans, beside many mixtures. It was a typical scene.

There is no race question in the Islands. An educated young Hawaiian declared to me, "There is no race prejudice and no exclusion on account of color." He said this applied to business and other relations.

On the street-cars of Honolulu you find yourself surrounded by all sorts of men and women whilst being whisked through the pretty sun-lit and rain-cleansed streets of the city. Americans and the white nationals of other countries surround you. There are dark-skinned Hawaiians with their often fine and expressive features and lustrous eyes, whilst serious Portuguese, lively Porto Ricans and active little Filipinos are all in evidence. Negroes are occasionally seen. You elbow the Orient without visiting it. Dignified Chinese and Japanese are particularly observable. Most all members of these races wear the conventional western attire. The women, excepting some of the Oriental peoples, generally dress in white. If you want to see magnificent black pigtails graced with brilliant colored ribbons, sit in a Honolulu street-car some afternoon when the school children are going home. Many of the adult Chinese women are garbed in their national blues and wear pantaloons of the regulation eastern style. The host of fetching Japanese costumes appeal to you. The dark-eyed women of the fascinating Land of Art display an infinite variety of patterns and colors in kimonos and other Nipponese accessories connected with dress. Their obies, as in Japan, are gay beyond description. The wonderful white stockings and getes constitute a form of foot gear seen nowhere outside of the far East. All these people are polite and orderly in their association and converse together as if of common racial origin. The little Japanese ladies bob and smile gracefully when compelled to step in front of you.

In Honolulu the Oriental business quarter almost imperceptibly mingles with the American business section of the city. Japanese and Chinese signboards, with their strange characters, are interspersed with the English alphabet. The exquisite tints of the fabrics of Oriental civilization touch the more somber colors from the Occident. Japanese and Chinese counting-houses are served by men who barter in different languages and who calculate with balls strung on wires. There is mutual patronage of establishments conducted by different breeds of men. The wholesale concerns present very similar characteristics. Some of the big Oriental houses do an annual business of from half a million to several millions of dollars per year. These rivals entertain a mutual respect for one another and pull together on behalf of Hawaii and Honolulu. The fact so little understood by those who are insular or prejudiced in their feelings, that the broadest cosmopolitan principles of business are transmuted into success is finely illustrated in prosperous Honolulu. It pays to be polite and generous to competitors.

According to the 1916 report of the Governor of Hawaii, the estimated population of the Territory, exclusive of United States military forces, was divided as follows: Japanese 97,000; Hawaiians 23,770; Portuguese 23,755; Chinese 21,054; Americans, British, Germans and Russians aggregated 10,642; Filipinos 10,808; part-Hawaiians 15,334; Porto Ricans 5,187; etc.

In such a community society becomes somewhat blended. The Japanese marry little outside of their own people. Other races more or less inter-marry. There is mixed blood along with the purest racial strains in the higher social circles of Honolulu. Territorial and consular social functions are attended by representatives of all the races. In the intimacies of private life, as elsewhere, people largely keep within their own groups of friends, yet it is observable that such discrimination seems to be influenced by education and wealth quite as much as by the color of the skin or racial descent.

A leading college professor of Honolulu has said of the Islands, "The group may be looked upon as a great international laboratory." It teaches the priceless lesson that men and women can, under what we apprehend to be the most trying conditions, live close to one another in great harmony if they agree to do so. It has performed the splendid patriotic and political service of sending back to Japan and China thousands of ex-workers who have reported to their people at home that justice and good-will are possible under the flag of the United States. This is a mighty factor in the maintenance of the cordial relations so necessary to a continuance of the spiritual and material interests of the nations involved,—none more so than America.

The Christian workers of the Territory are alive to the possibility that the young people of these different races may not find a spiritual home with their parents or with America. Special work on their behalf is carried on successfully. The Friend, a publication of Honolulu founded in 1843, is now published in five languages. Church services in both American and foreign languages are reverently conducted in spacious Oriental places of worship. The congregations of churches of Oriental patronage are overwhelmingly made up of boys and girls under twenty years of age. Their Japanese and Chinese pastors are devoted and sincere men. They perform an admirable service to America by taking young men into their homes and instructing them in the principles of the Christian religion and the political ideals of their adopted country.

Some of my readers will naturally think that the varied population of Hawaii live in amity because of latter years the Islands have been strongly guarded by the army and navy of the United States. This fails to be a satisfactory explanation when we remember the historical fact that this concord has always existed and that in practical experience the heaviest armed soldiery does not suffice to create genuine racial unity. The assumption that the climate leads all these diverse peoples into a complacent attitude toward one another also fails to the ground when we recall that the different breeds represented include not only the most sensitive nations of the earth, but some of the emotional tropical peoples as well.

I have asked numerous men prominent in Hawaiian life what reason they could assign for the racial harmony that obtains in the Islands. The following may epitomize the views expressed. A leading Japanese pastor answered: "They (all races) have been treated well. Many of the leaders and employers of Hawaii are largely the descendants of missionaries and have treated their people in a Christian spirit, with frankness and with a spirit of good-will—that is the great reason." Said a widely-known Chinese minister: "We all live near together and understand one another. There is no discrimination between races either by local or United States government, or in schools, Y. M. C. A., churches, or in any other respect. The backing for the above is found in the liberal and Christian attitude of men in control of the country, who are largely the descendants of missionaries and who have maintained the Christ spirit in racial matters." A prominent white resident of Honolulu replied: "We treat them all like men—we don't slobber over them—but we treat them all alike, Americans, Portuguese, Japanese, Chinese, Porto Ricans, Filipinos, Hawaiians, all receive the same treatment in every respect. Their children all go to school together, sit by one another, play with each other, and no favoritism is shown to any politically or otherwise."

So then, the Divine injunction to do unto others as we would have them do unto us is largely responsible for this extraordinary situation. All these people prove responsive to the fundamentals of justice and love.

The value of practicing the Golden Rule in dealing with other races is clearly indicated in Hawaii. The importance of maintaining its precepts is becoming increasingly recognized on the Pacific Coast. Japan has for years honorably restricted emigration to America. It is extremely difficult to get along with other people if you fear or suspect them. We are face to face with the Orient. If we are to do business with Japan and China, the inuendo so often in the past applied to Orientals without foundation in fact, must cease. Our people will pay a tremendous price if they permit a portion of their press or citizenship to indulge in international rudeness or folly. Satisfactory relations and the interests of religion alike depend on whether we treat the Far East in a spirit of courtesy and good-will or no. Christian people all over America have a vast responsibility in this matter. The best development of America and the highest patriotism are bound up in it. Will the churches rise to the needs of the hour? Can we begin too soon?

SAN JOSÉ, California.

THE SECOND CRUCIFIXION.

"Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world!"

Loud mockers in the roaring street
Saw Christ is crucified again:
Twice pierced His Gospel-bearing feet,
Twice broken His great heart in vain.

I hear and to myself I smile,
For Christ talks with me all the while.

No angel now to roll the stone
From off his unawaking sleep,
In vain shall Mary watch alone,
In vain the soldiers' vigil keep.

Yet while they deem my Lord is dead
My eyes are on His shining head.

Ah! nevermore shall Mary hear
That voice exceeding sweet and low
Within the garden calling clear,
Her Lord is gone and she must go.

Yet all the while my Lord I meet
In every London lane and street.

Poor Lazarus shall wait in vain
And Bartimeus shall go blind;
The healing hem shall ne'er again
Be touched by suffering human kind.

Yet all the while I see them rest,
The poor and outcast, on His breast.

No more unto the stubborn heart
With gentle knocking shall He plead,
No more the mystic pity start,
For Christ twice dead is dead indeed.

So in the street I hear men say,
Yet Christ is with me all the day.

—RICHARD LE GALLEENNE, in "Christ in the Poetry of To-day."

[FRANKLIN S. BLAIR, of North Carolina, writes: "I was impressed by a recent Editorial—"An Unfair Question"? and at once recalled what I send herewith."—Eds.]

Uncle Jesse Cunnigim, an excellent good man, a prominent minister and long time presiding elder of the M. E. Church, South, who lived in Greensboro, N. C., related the following to the writer:—

A man said to me; Mr. Cunnigim, suppose a ruffian were to enter your room, apparently with full intent to kill your son, daughter or wife or yourself, what would you do? I said to him, the questioner—I'll suppose he will never do it. I have as good right to suppose he will never do it as you have to suppose that he will do it, and I am even with you. I stopped there. The man appeared ill at ease, nervous, not satisfied and said—It might occur, and what would you do? I answered, I have a better right to suppose the ruffian will never treat me in that way than you have to suppose he will, for such a thing has never occurred to me, any of my relations, neighbors or anybody I ever knew and I am seventy-five years of age and cannot live many years longer. So I have a better right to suppose that no one will ever treat me in that manner. My interrogator was still restless and unsatisfied. And I said to him, Many years ago I consecrated myself to God wholly, body, soul and spirit, the best I knew, and have continued ever since in that dedicated, consecrated condition. I have often prayed the Lord to take care of me in emergencies, threatened danger, in testing times and in sore temptation. So were a would-be assassin about to attack me to take life as you have supposed, I would at once pray our Heavenly Father and say, "Lord, I am thine, if I can best glorify thee by being kept alive, turn aside the hand of the assassin, but if I can best glorify thee by being killed, I am ready and would pass out of this life into a blessed eternity, and be forever safe from all trials and tribulations. Furthermore, the man who would shoot me to death is evidently not prepared for heaven and were I to kill him his soul would go to perdition, and with my faith in the protecting power of God claimed and declared, were I, an unrepentant, killed, I would follow him to the same torment forever, but if I refrained from killing him, he in the providence of God, might remain alive, be visited by the Day Spring from on high, be converted and come to heaven and strike glad hands with me where we would live together forever and ever in peace, happiness and heavenly joy, which in the language of this life is inexpressible and incomprehensible. For we preach that God is able to save to the uttermost them that come into him by Christ Jesus."

CHRISTIANITY AND CIVIL GOVERNMENT.

LUKE WOODARD

Christ's mission was not to antagonize human governments, nor to espouse the administration of them. He founded a kingdom of His own, distinct from all earthly kingdoms, bounded by no geographical lines, and limited to no nationality. He used no force in its establishment, and allowed none to His followers in its propagation or defense. He introduced a reign of grace, but it was grace that "reigned through righteousness."

Although Church and state are separated, and the Church's warfare is not with carnal weapons, still now as well as of old God is the moral governor of the world. The force of law is not relaxed. Christianity gives no sanction to anarchy. While the true followers of Christ belong to a kingdom which is not of this world—a spiritual kingdom, and only those who are born of the Spirit can enter it, still to meet conditions as they now exist for the government of those who are not in this spiritual kingdom, God has ordained civil government "for the punishment of evil-doers and for the praise of them that do well." While Christ's true followers are not of the world, they are in the world, and have their obligations to the human family of which they are a part. The New Testament teaches that Christians should honor those in authority in civil government, pray for them, and pay tribute, and be subject to these God-ordained powers that be. But subjection must not be construed necessarily to mean obedience. Obedience is required only when it does not conflict with the higher law of God. No human authority can rightly supercede the Christian's allegiance to Him. In all cases where civil government requires anything contrary to His clearly expressed will, it is the Christian's right to answer as did the apostles: "Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye."

He does not resist the law who submits passively and patiently to its penalty. The three who were cast into the fiery furnace, submitted to the authority of King Nebuchadnezzar as fully as did those who obeyed his decree to worship his golden image. The same is true of the martyrs, who suffered death rather than obey a law which was in conflict with the higher law of God. George Fox and the early Friends who suffered long imprisonment, were subject to authority which they could not conscientiously obey. The many Friends now in prisons in England because they could not fight, are not rebels against the English government. Neither are the conscientious objectors in this country. They are following the precepts and example of Him to whom all must give an account, who said, "Resist not evil." "Do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you."

Governmental conditions at the present time emphasize the words of our Lord: "Beware of the leaven of Herod." Plausible arguments are often employed to efface the distinction between a conscience that relates to the authority of God and that which relates to the authority of human government. The test of conscience, as of human conduct, is the revealed will of God.

While we freely admit that the difference is immense between a conscientious mistake in an apprehension of the mind of Christ, and a deliberate contempt or neglect of it, still we should not for a moment allow that conscientious error is equivalent to truth, or that a practice founded on error is equivalent to Christian obedience.

The following extract from a recent speech of Lord Hugh Cecil in the British Parliament is in point: "There are a great many people who care about religion, who care more profoundly about their country. These people have embarked on a path down which Germany has gone. To say that the safety of the Republic is the supreme law is profoundly untrue. Not the safety of the Republic, but the Divine law is the supreme law. For the honor and credit of this house, for the sake of this country of which we are citizens, because I would rather die than abandon the faith I hold so dear, I earnestly hope we shall adhere now and forever to the old doctrine, that, as much as we love our country, we love something better, and when appeal is made our answer will be clear, firm, and without hesitation."

CHRIST'S KINGDOM ON EARTH.

DAVID HOLLOWAY.

More than nineteen hundred years have passed since our Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ, came in the likeness of men, of the seed of Abraham, and the lineage of the house of David, to establish His Kingdom on earth.

It was not to be an outward, visible kingdom, for if such had been the purpose, doubtless the result would have been the re-establishment of the Jewish Kingdom, which had been overthrown, no doubt because of the disloyalty and long unfaithfulness of its subjects, the Jews, and also because the time had come in the Divine economy for "annulling the First Covenant," upon which it was based, and had its sanction and authority to exist. The apostle, in reference to the event, says, "In that he saith, a new covenant, he hath made the first old. Now that which decayeth and waxeth old is ready to vanish away." (Heb. viii: 13).

A kingdom, or government, in order to successfully exist, must have loyal subjects, representing the type and character of its design, so Christ's kingdom can only be realized through the rallying to its standard of subjects representing His character as indicated in His earthly career. But men, the medium of this representation, as they stand in the fall, unregenerate sons of our fallen father Adam, must undergo great change, ere they are eligible as subjects of the kingdom in question. This is an utterly impossible task, as man is left to his own liabilities and resources for its accomplishment. But through the marvelous mercy and condescending goodness of the Lord our God, he has not been so left, for by the gracious extension of His right arm of Power, a way and means were provided, through the coming, suffering and sacrifice on Calvary's Mount, of His only begotten Son, our Saviour and Redeemer, which, as man through enlightenment, discerns and in living faith accepts, together with the attendant gifts of Light, Life and Grace in the heart or soul, he may succeed to the exalted attainment of a unit in Christ's Kingdom here below.

However, the way and process is a humiliating one to flesh and blood, for it means man's reduction to the condition of the passive clay in the Heavenly Potter's hand. Said our blessed Saviour, "The Kingdom of God cometh not with observation, neither shall they say, Lo here, or Lo there, for the kingdom of God is within you." (Luke xvii: 20-21). It is within man as a seed; and as a seed in nature is dormant and ever remains so until its environment favors germination and growth, so does this seed or embryo principle of the Divine nature remain dormant until man, through the unerring eye-sight,—the Light that maketh manifest—discovers and in living faith accepts it as the true standard, joins himself thereto, and submits to the baptizing, cleansing process of the Grace that saves, for saith the apostle: "by Grace ye are saved through faith, and that not of ourselves, it is the gift of God." He may then witness this seed of the Kingdom, to germinate and grow into dominion in the soul, to be so in the ascendancy therein, as to regulate and control him in thought, word and deed, so that he becomes a new man, "old things having passed away and all things become new, and all things of God." (Cor. vi. 17-18.) Such an one being a servant of Christ, is a subject and fitting representative of His Kingdom.

Now, if the experience as presented in the foregoing is the true qualification of each component part or unit of Christ's Kingdom, then the hope of its ultimate realization lies in the increase and universal prevalence of these units, as they are joined together in one harmonious whole; which may reasonably be expected because of their affinity to each other.

However, it is a lamentable fact that this gracious and wondrous provision for man's restoration out of his fallen condition of death and darkness by nature into that of harmony and fellowship with his Creator has not succeeded, as was no doubt the design of its All Wise Benefactor.

But the failure should in no wise be attributed to a defect in the provision itself, but rather to man's failure to accept and fully co-operate therewith, as it has in many individual cases demonstrated its efficacy in accomplishing its design, to the full extent of its purpose, as also imperfectly in groups and congregations. And the imperfections in these have always been justly chargeable to the lack of man's full dependence upon, and entire acquiescence therein. "Know ye not, (saith the apostle) to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey, whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness." (Heb. vi. 16). As children of disobedience by nature, we are joined to the standard of sin and death, and as the children of obedience by Grace we are joined to the standard of righteousness and peace, the standard of the Prince of Peace and His Kingdom on the earth. The efforts that have been and are being put forth for the promotion and spread of Christ's Kingdom are as diversified in mode of operation as are the activities in general of the society and church organizations of which it is comprised. But of all these there seems not another, that embraces as fully in its profession, all the requirements of the Gospel plan of salvation as our little Society of Friends, or one that has accomplished so much in proportion to its numbers, in spreading the Messiah's reign on the earth, both by example and precept. Especially is this true as applied to our earlier career, when the principles and testimonies characterizing our profession were more closely adhered to. Particularly may it be observed that a qualification for the most efficient service has been realized by a close adherence in all our religious activities to our especially distinguishing testimony of the headship of Christ in His Church and over His own, in the way of its practical individual application. When an action is prompted by this true inward sense of requirement and qualification, it is a product of faith, and as it is entered upon and proceeded in to the end, in the measure and strength and guidance vouchsafed, it is blessed towards the accomplishment of its design.

(To be concluded.)

"To sin by silence, when we should protest, makes cowards out of men. The human race has climbed on protest; had no voice been raised against injustice, ignorance and lust, the inquisition yet would serve the law, and guillotines decide our least disputes. The few who dare must speak and speak again to right the wrongs of many."—ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.

"WHAT I TELL YOU IN DARKNESS."

The whisper that Thou gavest me
In hours of dark and pain
Becomes the whole eternity,
The one thing clear and plain.

The great assurance that Thou art,
And therefore I am I,
Because I am a minute part
Of Thy Infinity.

—CAROLINE HAZARD, in "The Yosemite and Other Verses."

CHILDREN'S CORNER.

AN INDIAN STORY POLE.—[In the notes of travel entitled "An Oregon Trail," reference is made to an Indian, William Shelton, and his story pole. Dr. Buchanan, of the Tulalip School, has forwarded us a copy of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer in which an enterprising reporter has reproduced very accurately a recital of the meaning of the figures of the pole given by William Shelton. It is reproduced here as likely to interest and possibly profit some of our younger readers.—Eds.]

Now, in this pole the first figure represents a black woman bear with her two cubs. The story attached to these figures is of a fight between the black bear and a grizzly-schack-sub. The grizzly had planned to kill and eat the black bear. Anticipating the plan of the grizzly, and realizing the greater strength of her opponent, she called her cubs to her as you see them on the pole and instructed and advised them what to do. She cautioned them that they must obey her without question and follow her advice, because she was older and more experienced. In the fight that followed 'schack-sub' killed her. Because she died for her children that they might live and prosper, the cubs being obedient followed her advice and killed and ate the grizzly cubs. That is why to-day there are so many black bears and so few grizzlies. The lesson taught by these figures is the self-sacrifice and duty of parents towards their children and the obedience and filial respect which children must show their parents, and which I believe has been one of the distinguishing marks of my family history. Like the black bear my family is numerous and there is no record of a son or daughter of a mother or father ever proving untrue to the teachings of this lesson.

"The next figures are those of a wolf and deer. The wolf is smart and mean and has better judgment than the other animals. The wolf desiring to eat the deer and realizing his greater strength and speed resorted to a cunning trick and induced the deer to play the game called 'sahlahb.' This game is played with ten wooden discs about the size of a silver dollar. It is seldom used to-day by the Indians. The wolf won the game, the deer losing through overconfidence and contempt for his opponents' supposed inferior size and strength. In the fight which followed, the deer failed to take into account the sharp claws and still sharper teeth of the wolf, and being conceited was defeated through that conceit, more than by the physical superiority of the wolf. The wolf tore and snapped and bit until he had killed the deer. He then ate only the choicest parts, scattering the remainder all over the hillsides. That is why to-day the deer are found on the hillsides, timid and ready to run at the least little sound. The lesson we learn is to have no false pride, to not be conceited and to grant to our opponents equal courage and ability.

"The story of the raven and fish-hawk, which are our next two figures, must carry with it to the white people as it has to us a moral lesson which is peculiarly applicable under present living conditions. The fish-hawk is a smart, honest and good fisherman, but the raven is a 'smarty,' tricky and foolish. He is also greedy and a big eater. His smartness is so apparent to every one that instead of being really clever he makes himself foolish in the eyes of those around him. The fish-hawk one day dropped from high in the air and dived through the ice to catch fish. He invited the raven to eat with him, when all around them were starving, because of the bad weather they could not get enough to eat. The raven seeing how easily the fish-hawk provided them with a meal and wishing to surpass his friend in entertainment, invited him to a meal which he attempted to provide in the same way as his friend, the fish-hawk. But in making the high dive through the ice he overlooked the fact that 'the Great Spirit' had not provided him with a strong bill and body and he was broken to pieces on the hard ice. The fish-hawk felt sorry and embarrassed that his host should have made such an error. He gathered up the pieces and made him come to life again. He caught fish for him and left him the lesson that we learn; that a man should not try to do more than he is capable of, nor should he make promises that he knows he cannot keep, nor should he try to live like those above him. People lose confidence in him and he gets a bad reputation as a braggart.

"The whale and mink are our next three figures. The mink is like the raven, he wants to show off and be a 'smarty.' He wants to be the whole thing and boss every one and everything around him without being fully capable of handling the job. His little brother, Tatiakha, on the other hand, is more careful. One day they were out in their canoe when big brother mink picked a row with the whale. The whale being big and good-natured for a long time paid no attention to the mink calling him names and abusing him. But at last he got tired of it and he swallowed the mink, his brother and their canoe, and if it were not for his little brother there would be no mink to-day. But Tatiakha saved them by cutting the heart of the whale while they were inside and, before the whale died, he swam to a creek. A canoe maker found the whale in the mouth of the creek and chopped a hole in his side and got them out. When they came out, their hair and eyebrows were nearly all gone and spoiled. The old crazy mink laughed at his little brother for losing his hair, but the little brother pointed out that big brother mink had also lost his eyebrows and his hair was nearly worn off. The lesson that we learn from this is by all means to avoid bad company.

"The Skate and the Devilfish.—" The skate represents a big Indian chief who gave a great celebration—squee gee—or potlatch. He invited all the birds, animals and fish. Among those invited was the devilfish, who, although helpless to dance or join in the festivities, came to look on. The house was crowded and he, pretending to be much weaker than he really was, remained near the door, so the mink, desiring to show off, tried to boss him around. He tried to lick the devilfish, who showed him that he was powerful by capturing him with one arm and taking him to the bottom of the sea near the creek. That is why he knows how to dive and swim in salt water. During the big celebration the skate sang his great totem. Everybody danced and he fell and was trampled on, and that is how he got so flat. And they took him out and threw him into the bay and he became a fish, where previously he had been a land animal, respected by all who knew him. Now he has lost that respect and swims in the mud at the bottom of the sea. We learn by these two lessons that a man should not fool with people he does not know, and that he should show respect for older people and for the long arm of the law.

"All these figures represent men and women in our family who have distinguished themselves by trying to inculcate principles of right living. In the balance of my figures I shall tell the story of my family's warriors, medicine men and wise men. I expect to have this pole finished before the end of the summer."

EFFECTS OF LONG IMPRISONMENT.

[The following, taken from an English publication, is vouched for as not a whit overdrawn.—Eds.]

There has been a very considerable increase in the number of cases reported of men in prison whose health is being seriously impaired by continued confinement. In support of this statement we append an extract from a letter forwarded by the friend of a C. O. in prison, who was sentenced for the first time in Seventh Month, 1916.

"I intend to attempt to make clear what are the effects of the diet in conjunction with long imprisonment. The test of the diet does not come until all the resources of the body have been brought down to the irreducible minimum, and you rest entirely upon the nourishment provided. When that is reached deterioration becomes most marked, with varying effect, of course, upon different constitutions. The common experience is that a man passes into one or all three of the following stages: (1) Very hungry all the day, (2) Hunger more acute, with pains in the stomach intermittently; (3) Extreme weakness, nervousness and constant and very acute pain. There is a sharp contraction of the muscles, the face may be seen (or more bitterly felt), to twitch with pain, and the face also becomes dark, particularly about the eyes. Another feature which is now becoming pronounced even among the most intellectual men, and there is a fair sprinkling of college students here, is the weakening of the mental power, and as we are passing through physiological and psychological changes which probably none of us understand, who can tell what the consequences may be? It is like stealing a fellow's blood drop by drop. He goes down inch by inch, and I am very much afraid that many will be broken beyond repair. When a man is brought down like this, it is reasonable to suppose that if he has any constitutional weakness it will assert itself. . . . It is a matter very seriously affecting the health and lives of all prisoners. Were we released, we should at once raise the question ourselves; and while I am not inclined to ask for food as a C. O. I have felt very strongly that if I did not in some manner try to make the matter public, then I was acquiescing in a most inhuman crime. . . ."

A HERO OF PEACE.

CHARLES WHARTON STORK.

(In memory of my classmate, Caspar Wistar (Haverford, 1902), Medical Missionary, Died of typhus fever in Guatemala, Third Month 14, 1917.)

Not on the field of glory did he fall,
And by his grave no drooping banner stands,
Only white flowers from the toil-worn hands
Of swarthy peons rested on his pall.
Not once, but twelve long years he heard the call
Of duty, and obeyed its clear commands;
He lived a lonely life in alien lands,
And gave to strangers what he had, his all.

He did not seek for glory, would not care—
Plain Quaker fellow—for a monument.
But shall we honor only those that dare
To die on fields where blood for blood is spent?
Will God, you think, hold dearer him who gave His life to kill, than him who died to save?

—From the Haverfordian.

NEWS ITEMS.

AFTER WAR PEACE CONFERENCE OF ALL FRIENDS.

PURPOSE OF THE CONFERENCE.

To consider and re-state the testimony of the Society of Friends regarding war and international relations generally; to discuss the bearing of this testimony upon the existing international position, and upon other aspects of life, individual and social, and to consider methods for the preparation of the Society to uphold this testimony, and for the delivery of the message in all the world.

PLAN FOR THE CONFERENCE.

Six Commissions have been appointed and are engaged in conducting the following investigations:

(1.) THE EXACT CHARACTER AND FUNDAMENTAL BASIS OF THE TESTIMONY.

The Religious Basis.

The Testimony viewed historically.

The Testimony viewed scientifically.

The Testimony viewed in relation to Conscience.

The objections usually offered.

(II.) THE IMPLICATIONS OF THE TESTIMONY IN THE LIFE OF THE NATION AND IN INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS.

The doctrine of the State and of State organization.

War and Liberty in various forms of group-life.

International organization and co-operation.

Economic relations.

The difference between Civil Force and War.

Leagues of Nations.

Relations with Backward Races.

Disarmament.

(III.) THE IMPLICATION OF THE TESTIMONY IN PERSONAL LIFE IN SOCIETY.

Modern business methods including competition.

The wage system.

Capitalism and War.

Luxury and personal expenditure.

Responsibilities of Citizenship.

How is the individual affected as to character and outlook?

(IV.) THE PROBLEMS OF EDUCATION IN RELATION TO THE TESTIMONY.

A.—Our aim in education.

B.—Child Psychology.

C.—Methods.

- in (1) Home training,
(2) First-day Schools,
(3) Day and Boarding Schools.

and in regard to:

- (a) Discipline,
(b) Instruction and curriculum (especially including the teaching of history),
(c) Practical ways of encouraging friendliness in after life,
(d) Citizenship and the question of patriotism.

(V.) THE RELATION OF THE LIFE OF THE SOCIETY TO THE TESTIMONY. Our almost unique corporate testimony and our weakness in upholding it.

How can we hold the doctrine of the Inward Light and the freedom of the individual conscience and yet have a corporate testimony?

How far is our weakness traceable to faulty organizations?

Problems of reception, dissociation and birthright membership.

Leadership.

The Education of the Society:

- (1.) Generally.
(2.) In our distinctive principles.
(3.) In the sense of historic continuity in the Church at large and in the Society.

Danger of diffusion of effort; need for co-operation of various interests within the Society.

Danger of strife and divisions.

Our witness effectual only through a consecrated life.

(VI.) METHODS OF PROPAGANDA.

The method in relation to the ideal.

What methods can and what cannot be used.

A plan for delivering the message.

Preparation for service.

Relation to existing agencies:

e. g. Peace Societies.

Groups in other countries.

The Missionary movement.

International movements.

e. g. Labour, Students, Women.

The English Commissions have been appointed by the Committee, and other members have been co-opted as the work has developed. Similar Commissions have been appointed in America by a Committee representative of all branches of the Society of Friends, which is co-operating with the English Committee in the preparation of the Conference.

W. Blair Neatby is acting as Secretary to the English Commissions, and L. Hollingsworth Wood, 20 Nassau Street, New York, as Secretary to the American Committee.

The enquiries of the Commissions are proceeding. Each Commission will prepare a report, and these will be collated so as to avoid mere repetition, but not necessarily to eliminate conflicting views. The Commissions aim at completing their reports at an early date, although events unfortunately may make it possible to extend the time. The reports will be published with an historical introduction for the use of members of the Conference. They will probably be embodied in such final report of the Conference as may be issued.

Articles are appearing in publications of the Society, in order that thought may be concentrated in every possible way upon the questions which the Commissions are investigating. Quarterly Meetings should arrange discussions of a preliminary character, study groups should meet in Particular Meetings, and individual Friends should be encouraged to read and study. Study Notes with a short Bibliography are being prepared, and application for information may be made to W. Blair Neatby. The results of such study should be sent to him when valuable points emerge, or when definite agreement is reached on vexed questions. In this way the whole Society can actively co-operate in preparing for the Conference. Still more important is the preparation by prayer and the spirit of expectant faith, which may be quickened and find expression in specially arranged devotional gatherings in different localities.

The Conference will need to consider the reports of the Commissions, and to reach conclusions in reference to practical suggestions that may be brought before it. Such conclusions will not of course be binding upon any constituent Yearly Meeting, but where necessary will come up for consideration at Yearly Meetings following the Conference. It will in any case be well to look to a continuation committee, that would seek to carry forward such plans as do not need the ratification of Yearly Meetings, and to act as a connecting link in cases where joint action by various Yearly Meetings is decided upon.

FRIENDS are asking us why no more letters from A. J. H. and our present answer to all must be that the last letter received at her Moorestown home arrived last week, dated at Buzuluk, in Southern Russia, Third Month 22nd. Florence Barrow was the bearer of this letter, which was mailed in the United States.

We can inform our friends that A. J. H. made the return trip from Moscow to Buzuluk in safety, and when the final chapters of that and other eventful journeys are written we want to share them with you.—[Ems.]

In a letter from Auckland, N. Z., we extract the following:—

"Percy and Harold Wright, John Bennett, Arthur and Vertie Farrand, Tom Bentley, John Braisford and Edward Dorsett have been taken from our meeting and sentenced to various terms of imprisonment as C. O.'s. Percy Gill, Ernest Wright and Wm. Moffitt are all expecting to be arrested at any time. So we are feeling a bit stripped in Auckland just now."

The meeting appointed at Carversville, Bucks Co., Pa., for Samuel W. Jones, on the twenty-sixth of Fifth Month, was felt to be a profitable and much favored occasion. The meeting gathered in reverent quietness and the Gospel truths delivered were appreciated with serious interest by those who met for the hour of worship.

The First-day School and meeting at Buckingham that morning had been attended by Samuel W. Jones, his wife and son, and Walter L. Moore and also Alfred Steer, who had kindly brought them from Lansdowne in his automobile. There was quite a large meeting here and much satisfaction was expressed with the company and services of the visitors. They all attended the meeting at Carversville, where the company of William and Martha Bishop was also very acceptably added.

On the following First-day, Sixth Month 2nd, William and Martha Bishop attended Buckingham First-day School and meeting and the clear Gospel message left with them was received with much openness.

E. TOMLINSON.

DOYLESTOWN, Pa.

CHEYNEY COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES.—The Commencement exercises of the Cheyney Training School were held Sixth Month 12th, at Cheyney, Pa. Provost Smith, of the University of Pennsylvania, was the commencement speaker.

The class-rooms, dormitories and the Shelter School for Colored Orphans were open for inspection throughout the day. The exhibition of student work gave evidence that the course of study has been governed by the ideals of conservation that are necessary in this crisis. In the domestic art rooms were displayed attractive dresses that gave no evidence of the fact that they had been remodelled and were not new. Eggless and wheatless dishes and meat substitutes had been prepared by the domestic science department in such a tempting manner that economy of facts and sugar seemed no hardship.

At one o'clock, the Cheyney Community League held its monthly meeting in the Carnegie Library. Plans were discussed for the raising of money for the War Chest and for organizing the colored children of the neighborhood into a Summer club for gardening, canning, and repairing about the homes.

At four o'clock, the students marched to the assembly hall. Leslie P. Hill, principal of the School, announced that the exercises were not only to pay honor to the graduating class, but to consider the value of the work of the School. Members of the community, both white and colored, spoke on the service of the School to the community life. The Superintendent of the Thornbury S. S., and a member of the Cheyney Community League, spoke on the work of the School in the community. White neighbors expressed their confidence in the work of the School.

Lilian Elwyn Elliott, the editor of the Pan-American Magazine, and a native of England, spoke briefly on the spiritual awakening in England, which has grown out of the war. She expressed the hope that a similar rebirth of spirit would come to the nations of the American continent, wiping out distinctions of race. She said that the Cheyney Training School is one of the most interesting places she has visited in the U. S.

Majorie DeVere, a member of the graduating class, talked on the "Mission of the Negro at the Present Time." She showed that only through the service of the teachers could the Negro be trained to render efficiently the service that the nation is calling for. Sarah Tyler, of the class of 1915, told of her work at Princess Anne Academy, Maryland, and the qualities needed to grapple with community problems.

Provost Smith talked upon the "Spirit, Work and Sacrifices of the Teacher," in a direct and simple manner which touched the hearts of his audience. He said that the singing of the melodies by the School had upset him, carrying him back to the days of his boyhood, when he had first heard the plantation melodies. He said that his message had gone, and that he was at the mercy of his audience. He asked the Senior Class to forget that he was the Provost of the University and to look upon him as a big brother. Then looking back, in the spirit of reminiscence he unfolded the spirit and meaning of teaching.

The singing of the School was a delightful feature of the program. The Negro folk songs were sung with a simplicity and dignified restraint that made their message very impressive. Among the melodies sung were "We Are Climbing Jacob's Ladder," "Walk Into Jerusalem Just Like John," and "Listen to the Lambs."

Diplomas were presented by George Vaux, Jr., President of the Board of Managers, to Olive Freeman, Majorie DeVere, Carrie E. Hatcher, Jennie Goodgans, Juanita Thompson, George Dunlap and Harry Thomas, Jr. Two of the graduates have been appointed to teach at the Gay Street School, in West Chester, one will teach at Coatesville, Pa., and two at Morton, Pa.

Henry Thomas sailed for France in the signal service corps. George Dunlap will enter Cornell University for advanced work in Manual Training.

Bibles were awarded to Blanche Holly and Cleomie Holly for scholarship and study of the Bible. The two prizes in general scholarship were awarded to Gertrude Cain and Clementine Allen. To Mary Mitchell was given a war saving certificate for the most efficient work in gardening. The Sabbath School offered two half-scholarships to two worthy students.

In a letter recently received from Friends in China is the following:—"It is interesting to see old friends in new dress—Isaac Mason of the Christian Literature Society of Shanghai, has sent copies of William Penn's 'Fruits of Solitude' and Part II of 'Christian Discipline,' translated into Chinese by himself, with native assistance, and also a copy of 'The Passion for Souls,' by J. H. Jowett, adapted and translated by Isaac Mason and Ha Chi Tao, all dated 1917."

The Journal of the Friends' Historical Society has two treats in store for the near future. The last number of the Journal, received recently, announces that it has been decided to publish as a special Supplement to The Journal a paper by A. Neave Brayshaw, read at numerous English meeting-houses, describing the personal life of George Fox. Some of the material has been drawn from obscure and little-known sources, and "The Personality of George Fox" is presented in a light and with a detail which will be new to most readers.

The Supplement will be sold at the reduced price of one shilling. Later in the year a souvenir volume of the celebration of two-and-a-half centuries of London Yearly Meeting will probably appear.

DEATH OF THOMAS D. MATCHETT.—On Fifth Month 1st, the death occurred at Bath, England, of Thomas Darling Matchett, B. A. Lond. (A, Bath P. M.), aged thirty-seven. A Presbyterian from Ulster, he was employed by the Bath Education Authority. On the outbreak of war he could no longer bear the teachings usually given in the Free Churches and attended the Friends' meeting. Under the Military Service Act his tribunal refused exemption except from combatant service, and after nine months' unemployment, he was arrested and handed over. After 112 days in Wormwood Scrubs he lost fifteen pounds in weight. His second sentence was a year's H. L., begun last Summer at Dorchester, where three months later consumption developed. He was first removed to the prison infirmary and then, by order of the Home Secretary, to the Winsley Sanatorium. After six weeks' treatment there, he was discharged from the army and sent home—to die. The interment took place in the Friends' burial ground, Bath. No mourning was worn and there were no flowers, but the Bath branch of the N. C. F. sent a "victor's crown" of laurel. A similar tribute of sympathy came from C. O.'s at Dartmoor. T. D. Matchett leaves a widow and two small children.

REPORT OF THE TREASURER OF THE AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE FOR WEEK ENDING SIXTH MONTH 15, 1918.

Received from 29 Meetings.....	$5,565.86
Received from 25 Individuals.....	1,878.50
Received for Supplies.....	15.75
Received for Armenian and Syrian Relief.....	13.00
	<hr/>
	$7,473.11

CHARLES F. JENKINS, Treasurer.

[The following reached our office a few days ago and we wish to share it with readers of THE FRIEND, to whom T. E. H. needs no introduction.—Eds.]

BUCKS, England, Fifth Month 26, 1918.

DEAR FRIEND:—

I must be allowed, I feel, to send a few lines to express my thankfulness for the beautiful and helpful message from Philadelphia Yearly Meeting addressed to all Friends engaged in relief and reconstruction work. It will have been a real spiritual assistance to not a few of our workers in France to receive this loving Christian message, and to know of the wide-hearted sympathy of Philadelphia Friends, which we have already learned to appreciate in so many other ways. I was especially thankful for the statement on our Society's Peace testimony put forth by Philadelphia Yearly Meeting which puts with rich clearness and simplicity the way of life for which we feel called to stand.

Thine very sincerely,
T. EDMUND HARVEY.

CAMP FRIENDLY.—At Northfield, Massachusetts, during Seventh Month 9-17, there will be held the fifteenth session of the Summer School of the Women's Foreign Missionary Societies. Some delegates may wish to secure rooms in the dormitories, others may prefer to enjoy the tent life offered by our denominational camp. We urge that every young woman seriously consider applying for admission to Camp Friendly.

The morning hours are spent in stimulating Bible Classes, in interesting Mission Study Courses, and in refreshing lectures. In the afternoon, following the Rest Hour, come the picnics, hikes, drives, tennis matches, teas, receptions, etc. At sunset are the devotional services, while in the latter part of the evening are the formal platform addresses. Lights are out at ten o'clock.

Names with the registration fees should be sent to Eleanor Gifford, South Westport, Mass. The expenses are as follows:—registration fee, $1.50; board and room (four in one tent), $10.50; stage (round trip), 8.50.

Northfield has given a more radiant life to many; it can give the same to Friends. We must take every opportunity to increase in ourselves that spirit of Jesus which alone can lead us into a new and higher way of life. To match the opportunity of the hour, we must have that positive faith which will empower us to guide our motives and conduct with undivided loyalty to Jesus.

Friends profess to believe that World Peace will come when the teachings of Jesus become the basis of our civilization. Other denominations base their mission work on the extension of the Gospel of Jesus. The desire for Universal Peace felt by Friends, and the hope for World Evangelization shared by all Christian denominations, both depend upon the same means—the knowledge and application of Jesus' message.

If the Evangelization of the World is to result in Universal Peace, then the Gospel presented to the so-called heathen must in essence be what is known as Quakerism. At Northfield there will be a thousand Christians considering the means of taking a new faith to the Eastern countries. If Friends have felt the compelling grip of Truth, then let them give themselves to it unreservedly. At an interdenominational conference, held to consider the world extension of Christianity, we ought to be present to represent our interpretation of Christian Truth. No amount of self-satisfied aloofness can justify us if we fail at this strategic moment to give our testimony as to what phase of Christianity should be spread abroad by the Christian Church.

ELEANOR GIFFORD.

NOTICES.

A COMMITTEE of Burlington and Bucks Quarterly Meeting of the Society of Friends will hold a meeting for Divine Worship in the Orthodox Friends' Meeting-house, in Crosswicks, N. J., First-day, Sixth Month 23d, at 3 o'clock.

All are cordially invited to attend.

JOSEPH MIDDLETON,
WILLIAM BISHOP, } For the Committee.

FRIENDS' SELECT SCHOOL NOTICE.—Applications for admission should be made as early as possible. Catalogues will be furnished on application to the Principal, who will be glad to confer or correspond with parents. The next year opens Ninth Month 23rd.

WALTER W. HAVLAND, Principal,
140 N. Sixteenth Street, Philadelphia.

FRIENDS' LIBRARY, 142 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILADELPHIA.—During Seventh and Eighth Months Friends' Library will be closed, except on Fifth-days, from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M.

LINDA A. MOORE,
Librarian.

MEETINGS from Sixth Month 23rd to Sixth Month 29th:—

Chester, Pa., Monthly Meeting, at Media, Second-day, Sixth Month 24th, at 7.30 P. M.

Concord, at Concordville, Third-day, Sixth Month 25th, at 9.30 P. M.

Woodbury, Third-day, Sixth Month 25th, at 8 P. M.

Abington, at Horsham, Fourth-day, Sixth Month 26th, at 10.15 A. M.
Birmingham, at West Chester, Fourth-day, Sixth Month 26th, at 10 A. M.

Salem, Fourth-day, Sixth Month 26th, at 10 A. M.

Philadelphia, Fourth and Arch Streets, Fifth-day, Sixth Month 27th, at 10.30 A. M.

Goshen, at Malvern, Fifth-day, Sixth Month 27th, at 10 A. M.

Lansdowne, Fifth-day, Sixth Month 27th, at 7.45 P. M.

DIED.—At her home, in Norfolk, Va., Sixth Month 2, 1918, REBECCA COPLAND FUTRELL, in her thirtieth year, wife of Horace C. Futrell and daughter of Josiah and F. Rebecca Copeland, Woodland, N. C. She was a member of Rich Square Monthly Meeting of Friends.

—, at the home of his niece, in Butlerville, Ark., on Third Month 17, 1918, ALBERT L. JONES, in his eightieth year; a member of Cottonwood Monthly Meeting of Friends, Kansas.

—, At Camden, N. J., tenth of Sixth Month, 1918, SARAH W. REEVE, widow of Richard H. Reeve, in her seventieth year; a member of Haddonfield Monthly Meeting, N. J.

—, at Ashboro, N. C., on the fourth of Sixth Month, 1918, LYDIA LITTLE COX, widow of Nathaniel Cox, in her eighty-ninth year; a lifelong member of Holly Springs Monthly Meeting, N. C.

—, at her home in West Branch, Iowa, Fourth Month 11, 1918, ELIZABETH J. SATTERTHWAIT, in the seventy-ninth year of her age.

—, on the seventeenth of Fifth Month, 1918, at the Barclay Home, West Chester, Pa., DEBORAH C. SMEDLEY; a member and elder of Birmingham Monthly Meeting of Friends, in her eightieth year.

WOOLMAN SCHOOL

A Friends' School for Social and Religious Education.

Six Weeks Summer Term:

Seventh Month 1—Eighth Month 10, 1918.

Courses in Hebrew Prophecy, Teaching of Jesus, History of Friends in the Nineteenth Century, Social Service, First-day School Teaching for Children and Adolescents, The Bible in the Schools, and Internationalism.

Send for Circular.

ELBERT RUSSELL, Director,
WOOLMAN SCHOOL,
SWARTHMORE, PA.

Let Me
Help You

W. J. MacWaters

In Selecting Your

RUGS AND CARPETS

Domestic -- -- Oriental

ALL WEAVES

The Home of Bundhart Wilton

"DURABLE AS IRON"

HARDWICK & MAGEE CO.

1220 Market Street

GLASLYN-CHATHAM

PARK PLACE

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

A Family House of Established Reputation.

Open Throughout the Year.

NATHAN L. JONES.

POCONO MANOR INN

POCONO MANOR, PA.

SPRINGTIME in the Pocono Mountains is ever a delight to those who admire and study nature. The Birds and Flowers are numerous and varied, and the Trout Fishing in the Swiftwater is wonderful.

J. W. HURLEY, Manager

(Pocono Summit Station, D. L. & W. R. R.)

WALL PAPERS—All Grades

Custom of Friends Specially Selected

FRANK C. BUEHL

Successor to S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON

902 SPRING GARDEN ST. - PHILADELPHIA

Store open until 10.30 A. M. Any other time by appointment only

Opposite Spring Garden Station, Phila., & Reading R. R.

ESTABLISHED 1849. BELL 'PHONE.

M. GATCHEL

126 N. 21st St., PHILA.

MILLINERY, PLAIN AND FANCY

'Phone, Spruce 303

Hajoca Pedestal Lavatory

Simple and beautiful in design. Its plain, smooth surfaces are easy to keep clean. Equipped with the Hajoca Waste, which prevents backing up of residue from previous ablations.

Come see our model bathrooms. Our showrooms are within easy reach of City Hall. Hajoca Book, free.

HAINES, JONES
& CADBURY CO.
1130-1144 Ridge
Ave.

(at 12th and Spring Garden Streets)

W. B. WEAVER UNDERTAKER and EMBALMER

550-552 N. 5th St., PHILA., PA.

Special Attention Given to Funerals
In and Out of the City. Also Chapel
Accommodations for Funerals.

BELL 'PHONE : ESTABLISHED 1880

To enjoy good health and a sound digestion use
PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT BREAD
made from the entire wheat grain ground on a stone mill. A perfect food and natural regulator. Sold by all good grocers in Philadelphia.

Write for particulars to

PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT CO.

10th & Susquehanna Ave., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

"FRIENDS AND THE INDIANS"

FOR SALE AT $1.50 BY

FRIENDS' BOOK STORE

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

JOSEPH C. FOGG FUNERAL DIRECTOR and EMBALMER

S. W. Cor. Sixteenth and Race Streets

Special attention given to Friends' Funerals

Bell 'Phone : Spruce 1646

OUR aim is to make our customers feel that the Holmes Press is their plant. We have room for a few more such proprietors.

THE HOLMES PRESS

J. Linton Engle, Pres.

1336 Cherry Street, Philadelphia

Premier Duplicating Co.

Mimeographing, Multigraphing, Printing, Type-writing, Addressing, Mailing, etc.

630 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

The Lakeside

Eagles Mere, Pa.

Superior location, overlooking the beautiful lake, 2200 feet above the sea level. Sailing, boating, bathing, tennis and golf. House heated by steam, elevator, electric bells, private baths, hot and cold running water in a large number of rooms. Garage. Personal management. Send for booklet.

J. S. KIRK & SON, Proprietors.

THE following timely books recommended by the Social Order Committee of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting, are for sale at Friends' Book Store, No. 304 Arch Street, Philadelphia.

"The Track of the Storm," 111 pp. $5
M. B. Crook,
"The Practice of Christianity," $2.00
"The Church and the Hour,"
Viola D. Scudder, 1.00
"The Social Problem,"
C. A. Edwood, 1.25
"The Abolition of Poverty,"
J. H. Hollander,75
"Christianizing the Social Order,"
William Rauschenbusch, 1.50
"The Arm of God,"75
"The Day of Our Visitation,"
William Littlebey,50
"A Word of Remembrance and Caution to the Rich,"
John Woolman,95

WANTED—IMMEDIATELY—a STENOGRAPHER.

Will pay prevailing rate of salary.

AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE,
20 South 12th Street, Phila., Pa.

WANTED—a FRIEND'S FAMILY OF THREE adults would like to take charge of a house in the suburbs, during the summer, while the owners are away.

Address R. S. B.,

Care of "THE FRIEND,"
207 Walnut Place.

WANTED—a POSITION as COMPANION, CARE of an invalid, or as house-keeper.

Address E,

55 East Stewart Avenue,
Lansdowne, Pa.

WANTED—by a YOUNG WOMAN, a RECENT Westown Graduate, a position as caretaker of Children or companion to an elderly person.

Address R,

"THE FRIEND,"

The beautiful lawn, the productive garden, or the well washed automobile, may bespeak the satisfactory service of

Rhoads Nonkink Hose

It is light and smooth; easy to pull about; a pleasure to use; so built that it will not soon kink or break.

J. E. RHOADS & SONS

PHILADELPHIA: 12 N. THIRD ST.
NEW YORK: 102 BEEKMAN ST.
CHICAGO: 322 W. RANDOLPH ST.
BALTIMORE AGENCY: 37 S. CHARLES ST.
FACTORY AND TANNERY, WILMINGTON, DEL.

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE MATERIAL THAT WE SELL

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY
MANUFACTURERS
PHILADELPHIA

Philadelphia's
Representative Store

ELKINS, MORRIS & CO.

BANKERS

REPRESENTATIVES

PAUL W. BROWN
JAMES P. MAGILL

LAND TITLE BUILDING
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

RAILROAD AND PUBLIC UTILITY BONDS

FOR

CONSERVATIVE INVESTMENT.

FULL PARTICULARS ON REQUEST

SEE WALKER & KEPLER

FOR

Good Electrical Work

531 CHESTNUT ST. - PHILA.

HARRY S. LEE

313 WALNUT STREET

PAINTER AND GRAINER

ANTIQUE and OFFICE FURNITURE RESTORED
JOBGING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO
ESTIMATES

Letchworth Cottage Spring Lake Beach, N. J.

Open for the Season 1918

A. C. & S. H. Letchworth

R. C. Ballinger Ernest R. Yarnall John A. Stratton
TELEPHONES

Bell—Spruce 17-81 - Keystone—Race 637

R. C. BALLINGER & CO.

CONTRACTORS and BUILDERS

218 N. Thirteenth St. Philadelphia.

ALFRED C. HAINES

Building Glass and Paints

56 N. Front St., Philadelphia.

WM. H. PILE'S SONS

BOOK AND JOB PRINTING

482 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO THE

PRINTING OF BOOKS AND CATALOGS

ALBERT C. RIDLEY

1714 SANSON STREET

Engraving and Printing

FINE BUSINESS STATIONERY

Wedding Invitations, Calling Cards, Greeting Cards, Dia Stamped Writing Paper

TELEPHONE—LOCUST 1782

Baltimore & Ohio Railroad

4 1/2% Equipment
Trust Certificates

Due serially April 1, 1921-27.

Issued under the Philadelphia Plan

SECURED by standard equipment costing twenty-five per cent. in excess of the issue.
The Company has paid dividends on its preferred and common stocks for 18 years.

Price to yield 6%
Send for Circular PF-166.

The National City Company

Correspondent Offices in 24 Cities
Philadelphia—1421 Chestnut St.
Telephone—555 Locust

Bonds Short Term Notes Acceptances

GIRARD TRUST CO.

BROAD and CHESTNUT STS.

CAPITAL }
AND } $10,000,000
SURPLUS }

Acts as Executor, Trustee, Guardian, Administrator, Assignee and Receiver. Safes to Rent in Burglar-proof Vaults. Interest Allowed on Deposits. Member of Federal Reserve System.

E. B. MORRIS, President.

Friends Arch St. Centre

304 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Provides comfortable accommodations for guests by the day or week. Meals at moderate prices.

AMELIA D. FEATHERSTONE, Matron.

FOUNDED—MAY 1871.

THE FRIEND.

A RELIGIOUS AND LITERARY JOURNAL.

VOL. 91.

FIFTH-DAY, SIXTH MONTH 27, 1918.

No. 52.

THE FRIEND.

Published Weekly. Price $2.00 a year in Advance.

Publisher, DAVIS H. FORSTYHE.

Editors { J. HENRY BARTLETT,
 DAVIS H. FORSTYHE,
 MARY WARD.

Make remittances payable to

THE FRIEND,

No. 207 WALNUT PLACE, PHILADELPHIA.

Failure promptly to renew a subscription is not regarded as a notice to discontinue.

Entered as second class matter at Philadelphia P. O.

REVOLUTION OR EVOLUTION.

"The wind bloweth where it will, and thou hearest the Voice thereof, but knowest not whence it cometh and whither it goeth; so is every one that is born of the Spirit." You recall the setting of this great spiritual lesson as given us in the early part of John's Gospel, when the Jewish ruler, held in high repute by his people, but drawn by the irresistible cords of attraction to the young preacher who had come among them from the hill town of Galilee, sought Him out under the protection of darkness.

The question the learned doctor put to the New Teacher has risen for solution in the breast of every sincere and thoughtful man and woman from that day to this. It is a universal question and an all-embracing one.

It received in the gathering dusk of that evening interview the only satisfying answer that can ever be given it, when the Divine teacher, nearing the end of the discourse and turning, we may easily fancy, with loving eyes, on the would-be disciple, riper by far in worldly experience than himself, possessed of material power and wealth which He did not aspire to, honored and even revered as a rabbi should be esteemed—He said: "Art thou the teacher of Israel and understandest not these things?"

How would it be to-day were the scene shifted to the twentieth century? Were the question of long ago to be put for a new answer to suit our time and place?

It could surely have no other answer than that which our Lord gave to Nicodemus in the garden when he said—"Thou must be born anew."

The topic upon every lip, when the tragedy of the battlefield has been exhausted is—When the war is over, what kind of life is that which we are then to live? That it will be a reconstructed life we all agree, but how thoughtful are we of the profound truth which dawned so slowly, if indeed it dawned at all upon Nicodemus, as our Lord said—"That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit."

There is no new world to succeed this in which we are living to-day, except as men and women in the sincerely prayerful attitude of Nicodemus seek to know that change of nature which is the beginning of the new birth with them.

Men and women are the agents, Divinely appointed, for bringing the world out of the chaos into which they have precipitated it, and we must reckon with the fact that the forces of redemption are personal; that it is not God's plan as revealed in nature, in history and in revelation to work out the redemption of the race by miracle or intervention. His law to the individual has been "work out your own salvation with fear and trembling," and as with the individual so it must be in the broader and more collective capacity of the nation.

We find it easy to believe that everywhere society is breaking up and old conditions are giving place to new. Our habits

If all men were perfect, what should we have to suffer of our neighbor for God? But now God hath thus ordered it, that we may learn to bear one another's burdens; for no man is without fault; no man but hath his burden; no man sufficient for himself; no man wise enough for himself; but we ought to bear with one another, help, instruct, and admonish one another.—Imitation of Christ.

The Index to Volume 91 has been prepared and will be mailed to those of our subscribers who care to have a copy.

This issue closes Volume 91. A favor will be conferred if subscribers to the paper will remit the subscription price for the new volume without the remainder of a bill.

It shall continue to be the aim of the management of THE FRIEND to hold fast to all we value most of the past and to reach forward to what the future brings us with judgment tempered by experience.

The past year has witnessed the notable introduction of the Young Friends' Supplement, we have tried to keep Friends posted concerning the work of the Friends' Unit in France and one or two other distinctly new features may have crept into our pages; in the main, however, we have followed the long-established lines, and week by week have made the effort to furnish what a religious denominational weekly is expected to give its supporters.

We are glad to announce that our subscription list has known a decided increase for the year. There are still, however, many who should be included on it, but who through indifference or for some better reason are not so included. We should be glad to enlarge the list of those who in renewing a subscription for themselves include a friend, either of their own or of our choosing.

We gratefully acknowledge the substantial support of those who have made it possible for us to send THE FRIEND to four or more families, who value the weekly visits and who, without this or other help, would not receive it.

We ask again, as we have asked before, that you continue to help THE FRIEND as partly your own possession, to send us papers for publication, to criticize what you see we may be able to improve, and in whatever ways you can to give suggestive hints for its future management.—[EDS.]

of life, our planning for the future, our appraisal of values, seem to take on a new aspect with each new month as we remove from the calendar the page that chronicled the passing of the last one. Many of these changes are very serious changes to many of us. Those who have a right to claim a fuller knowledge of the undercurrents that control the future than most of us profess to have, warn us to expect greater changes than those we have already known, changes that will disturb and maybe shatter the most stable and enduring pictures we have allowed ourselves to plan.

Men have told us that the world was on the eve of the most critical period of its long history, and the dawning of that day seems now at hand. There comes to Christianity such a challenge as it has never known since the days when the little band of eleven gathered together after their Lord's resurrection and in act pledged themselves to the redemption of the world. It was a wondrous opportunity that presented to that little company; every page of history since that day seems to pay tribute to their dedication and self-surrender. It must be the same to-day. The challenge is too vast for measurement, but in proportion to the greatness of the challenge is the greatness of the opportunity for service.

But let us not be deceived. There is a law of nature and there is a means of grace. The same all-ruling Father governs and directs both, and both, for aught we know, are alike excellent. He has seen fit by the slow process of development to evolve from a lower form of life a higher and more perfect form, and finally He has crowned His most perfect creature with elements that are God-like in character. Here it seems evolution ceases.

Our Lord spoke no evolutionary doctrine to Nicodemus.

It was a new creation He called for. A change from that which was in nature carnal to that which was spiritual.

Just as the winds of heaven seemed that evening to have the freedom of the skies and to come from whatever quarter they would, so must we look for the new birth to take place within us. It will not be accompanied by anything spectacular, but it will mark a turning point. We shall have faced about; a revolution shall have been accomplished or ever we have made the transfer from a state of nature to a state of grace; no evolutionary process can satisfy the demands of a destiny so vast as that of the human soul.

When this has been realized even if only in part, the new life will have begun—the vision will have broadened out to new horizons which stretch beyond the confines of what we have known before, and the value of a life will be measured more by the service it can render than by the good things it can enjoy. Richard Roberts, in his wonderful address at Richmond, Ind., last Autumn spoke thus of that experience:—

"It is to live where the veil of the unseen has been worn thin by the prayer of ages, to dwell on the open threshold of that treasure house where the true knowledge and the true wisdom are hidden; to have our tents pitched upon that frontier line of the invisible world where we can catch glimpses of its glory and hear echoes of its song." D. H. F.

No duty to the brotherhood of mankind is fully discharged so long as there are anywhere in the highways of human life lost souls who are bewildered, afflicted, and tormented. Society begins to see that what are called lost men and women are human beings like ourselves.—GEORGE BATCHELOR.

AFFLICTION.

If I "go softly all my days,"
Let me remember this,
As I walk solitary ways
Nor share in this world's bliss.

"Because Thou didst it." David knew
That accolade of pain,
And rose with spirit firm and true
To praise the Lord again.

—CAROLINE HAZARD, in "The Yosemite and Other Verse."

THE WESTTOWN COMMENCEMENT.

[A class of fifty-five graduated at Westtown on the 12th of Sixth Month. Thirteen States, the District of Columbia and Japan were represented in the class roll. We are permitted to print the following papers as representing the closing exercises. The article on Military Drill is a portion of the first prize essay on Peace.—Eds.]

VALEDICTORY.

WALTER PEARSON YARNALL.

For the past three-and-a-half years men and women everywhere have had to face increasingly hard problems. These are times when crises are met and decided almost daily. And this morning we are facing what will undoubtedly prove to be one in our lives. Here at Westtown we have lived in comfort and peace, but before us lies a world that knows no peace. And we are going to enter this world at a critical time. What are we going to do? The cry of service, which we have heard so often in the past few months, is still ringing. We have chosen this word "Service" for our motto. Let us look, and see if we know what it means. We have had service talked to us, we have heard lectures on service; in fact, service has become almost a by-word with many people, and is constantly the theme of speakers all over the country. But do we really know what it means? It means a consecration and firm devotion to purpose that nothing can change. We will have, in the years to come, opportunities never before equalled to show ourselves capable of consecrating ourselves to service. Our call will surely come; it may be in one way, or it may be in another; it may be at home, or it may find expression across the ocean, we cannot tell; but when it does come, we must be strong to answer, and answer valiantly, with all that is in us. For others will look to us for example, and we must give them a worthy one; we must not be tried in the balance and found wanting. New experiences are waiting for us, new trials, new temptations, and are we going to fail?

For to-day, our last day as students at Westtown, has arrived. We have at last completed our school work, and are now, in our turn, leaving the familiar grounds and buildings which have sheltered and protected us for the last few years. But the joy of going out into a larger and more useful sphere, for that is surely what we may look forward to doing, is somewhat lessened by a feeling of sorrow at leaving behind all that has meant so much to us. But before we say a final farewell to the School, let us look back and see what she has done for us.

We have all made friends, and I doubt not, true and lasting friends; and he who has not experienced true, sincere friendship has missed a very great deal. Have we not all had cares, or troubles, or knotty problems which we have gladly shared with our friends, and gained comfort, satisfaction, and solution by it? Have we not all had times of depression or feelings of injustice that have all been straightened out by the kind words and sympathetic interest of our friends? Surely we have.

And then we remember the cool, brisk days of the Fall; the Winter days, when the mercury crept close to zero outside; and the warm, fragrant, out-doors—inspiring days of the Spring, when we struggled to our utmost to bring victory to the old school we loved so well. And we remember, also, how we forgot ourselves in our united efforts to support the faith of those who were depending on us in these struggles. Surely, we gained from them knowledge that no book could give; and surely we came away from them with a stronger body and a much larger conception of unselfishness.

What can be found to compare to the many quiet hours that we have spent in the meeting-room; those hours when we were strengthened in character, and given a deeper sense of the true meaning of worship. They will always remain with us as one of the most treasured memories of our Westtown days.

And to you, our teachers and faculty, who have these long years patiently labored with us and for us, to you we extend our thanks this morning. We owe you much, yes, even more than we now realize, and we can only hope that as we go on to our places in the world, the knowledge that our labors have not been in vain will be an ample reward for them. For we have not had a barren existence here at school, but one that has been filled, immeasurably filled, even to overflowing, with the light of the spirit of Christ. You, our teachers, have helped us to receive this light. You have poured out on us from your larger and deeper understanding the best of yourselves that we might be likewise enriched.

And we leave the School to-day with the deepest thanks for its real, its true significance in our lives; and the sincerest hope that this, our commencement, may not be the end of a cycle in our career, but merely the beginning of the entrance into one that will prove far larger, far better, far more complete.

MILITARY TRAINING IN SECONDARY SCHOOLS.

E. BRYAN MICHENER.

Since we as Quakers condemn war as un-Christian, we also must condemn training for war. But as the world at large rejects our views on the non-Christian nature of war, they will also reject our views on war training. So if we combat successfully the introduction of military training we must meet the advocates of it on their own ground and answer their own arguments. Not only because of the national interest in the question, but also because of the present campaign in Philadelphia, it seems appropriate that we discuss the question this evening.

All the arguments in favor of military training in secondary schools may be summarized under two heads—first, the individual receiving such training will be benefited; second, the nation as a whole will be benefited as a result of individual improvement. They say the American youth of to-day lacks the physical stamina which the youth of earlier times enjoyed. Therefore the present day youth should be given military training to improve his physical condition. Europeans remark upon the lack of discipline of the American youth and their lack of respect for their elders and superiors. Military training will, they say, inculcate in its recipient all the lacking virtues and characteristics which are desired. The present stock argument from the national viewpoint is that it would make soldiers sooner than any other method. If every school-boy was in perfect health, was properly disciplined, and had military training, the nation would be healthier and more law-abiding as well as more easily defended. Therefore we should adopt military training.

But does such training really produce these desirable results? As to the physical side of the question, it is immediately granted that the present generation of school boys should be in good physical condition so they could perform their duties efficiently. But the only way to put these boys in physical condition is by proper physical training. In spite of the prevailing notion to the contrary, military training alone will not result in physical fitness. Military drill alone results in undesirable physical traits. Dr. Dudley A. Sargent, of Harvard, says: "Its constrained positions and closely localized movements do not afford the essential requisite for improving the general health and condition of the system. We must further conclude that the drill tends by its strain upon the nerves and prolonged tension on the muscles to increase the defects rather than to relieve them."

Military men realize that their drill is insufficient for physical development, so they provide "setting-up" exercises. The "Manual of United States Infantry Tactics," by Upton, says, "As the importance of 'setting up' cannot be overestimated, the exercise must be often recurred to, and all soldiers will be frequently practised therein." Captain H. J. Koehler, of the Gymnasium at West Point, says, "We here at the Military Academy are spending at least as much time upon the physical training of the cadet as is spent upon all military drills combined."

The Massachusetts Commission on Military Education and Reserve, which reported in 1915, and the New York Military Training Commission, which reported in 1916, and the New Jersey Commission, which reported in 1917, all opposed military training, but all favored thorough physical training.

Certainly, if military drill was sufficient for physical development, then the State Commissions, the United States Army and the National Military Academies would not waste time on purely physical training such as calisthenics.

Military drill is supposed to inculcate discipline and such desirable traits of character as alertness, industry, orderly behavior. It is granted immediately that discipline is essential for military training. But is such discipline the kind that is desired for civil life? Military discipline is thrust upon the individual, not because the individual sees its desirability or realizes his responsibility, but because his military superiors have the power to enforce it. The recipient of military discipline is apt to feel responsible to obey only as long as his superiors have direct charge of him. This strict discipline is apt to be followed by a relaxation as soon as the individual feels that he is not responsible to his superiors. This relaxation holds true in military school discipline also. John Dewey, Professor of Philosophy in Columbia University, says, "The usual experience of military schools (for pupils of public school age) shows that the rigid discipline of this part of the training is accompanied by relaxed discipline in everything else, students not feeling full responsibility when not immediately under the direction of others." The discipline we need in America is that self-imposed discipline which results from the individual realizing that his welfare and personal liberty are subservient to the welfare of society as a whole. The citizen with this kind of discipline feels the same responsibility whether he is directly under the eyes of the officer of the law or not.

The New Jersey Commission on Military Training reported that "it is a psychological fallacy to suppose that obedience to military authority, indeed, obedience exacted under any peculiar circumstances, may automatically be translated into the general habit of obedience. The same may be said of such qualities as alertness, promptness, industry, truthfulness. It is by no means capable of demonstration that those who have had military training, or been subject to military discipline, are superior to other citizens in the possession of these qualities."

The advocates of military training say that it should be adopted in secondary schools as a step in our national defense. Military training in secondary schools usually consists of military drill. In modern warfare such drill has little importance. Lord Kitchener said just before his death to "cut out much of the drill, because it had little value in modern warfare." The present day wars are fought by scientists, specialists, experts and military drill plays an insignificant part. General Leonard Wood, of the United States Army, says, "I do not believe we should give the training until the year in which the youth becomes nineteen." The New Jersey Commission on Military Training says that "it is especially significant that none of the great nations of Europe in which the military service of adults has been universal and compulsory, and which have shown phenomenal efficiency in the present war, has thought it necessary to resort to the military training of its boys." Does it not seem that if giving our boys such military training was really desirable from a military point of view, that all army men and military nations would be united in desiring such a change?

But the reason for opposing the adoption of such training is not a mere negative reason, but a positive one for military training in secondary schools will result in positive harm.

To give the adolescent boy military training will upset his standard of morals and create in his sub-conscious mind such tendencies, which will make avoidance of war extremely difficult.

Every psychologist and child worker knows the importance of developing the right habits in youth. Few important fundamental habits are changed after the period of adolescence. Realizing that fact the public schools and Sabbath schools try to inculcate habits of truthfulness, honesty, kindness in the children while the minds are yet in a plastic state. The mind of the adolescent must not be given undesirable impressions and war training can not but give undesirable impressions. It is utter folly to teach the youth that wars are preventable and that there are better ways to settle international disputes, and then take him out to the drill ground and teach him the manual of arms. The youth knows that if we did not expect more wars he would not be taught military things. He then secretly expects war in the future so as to be able some time to put in practice his ability. Why shouldn't he? Teach a boy law, medicine or business and he will expect to put in practice his knowledge and demonstrate his ability. Even if he does not participate actively in warfare, his sub-consciousness expects a war some time and does not revolt at the idea. The result is that war is believed to be inevitable and the individual makes no personal effort to avert it.

Military training will create a double standard of morals, one for the individual and another for the nation. Nathan C. Schaeffer, Pennsylvania Superintendent of Education, says, "That the explicit declaration of a British commander-in-chief that maxims like 'truth always wins in the long run,' 'honesty is the best policy,' did very well for copy books, but are not to be acted upon in warfare, shows how war and preparedness for war upset our ethical standard. Legitimate warfare includes and justifies 'all the mean, false, cowardly, and unchivalrous action which youth has been taught to despise in their own behalf, such as strategem, ambushes, spying,' to instill them in the sub-conscious life of adolescent youth results in moral damage from which the pupil never recovers." There never was a war during which the Ten Commandments and the Sermon on the Mount were not violated. If the boy is taught that nations can suspend the Decalogue or the Sermon on the Mount in times of national stress to suit the convenience of the nation, he will assume the same right to suspend them for his own individual convenience. The time will come when he has to make a decision. He will have to desert one or the other principle in a time of crisis. And because of the impression military training has made on his conscious and sub-conscious mind he is apt to take the path of least resistance and suspend for the time being any standards of right and wrong which conflict with his convenience.

Thus we see that military training in secondary schools not only fails to develop the individual physically, fails to inculcate desirable discipline and habits, fails to aid military defense of the nation; but it is a positive harm, as it makes the individual expect war and accordingly he does not try to avert war, as it creates a double standard of morals which easily results in the individual adopting the lower standards and dropping the higher. Thus we see that military training is unjustifiable even from the viewpoint of the military training advocate himself.

MODERN POETRY.

GRACE EVANS RHODES, JR.

At the present time poetry is filling a large and important place in literature and deserves careful reading and study. Such a variety exists in the poetry of to-day that it must be divided into several classes for one to understand the wide differences between different poets and kinds of poetry. Two large divisions of modern poets may be made, the one class containing those who conform to the accepted forms of poetry, in rhyme and meter, the other composed of poets who have cast aside these restrictions and set up for themselves new standards. Another way of grouping the poets is by their choice of subject. Thus there are the two large divisions of the nature poets and the poets who are interested in humanity. Under the second class come the war poets, the industrial poets, and those, like Tagore, who write with a love for all the world. I shall try to mention the representative poets of the different classes, describing briefly the characteristics of their poetry, giving examples of the work of a few poets, and telling a little about the revolutionary movement of the Imagists.

The most typical writer among the conforming poets is Alfred Noyes, the Englishman. Noyes writes according to the established standards of poetry, but is modern in his ideals. He might be classed as a nature poet, but he is also a poet of the days of Queen Elizabeth, a poet of modern England, and a poet of the Great War. His poetry is remarkable for its beautifully flowing lines and rich figures. The figures and coloring of Noyes' poetry and his skill in handling words are shown in the first verse of "The Highwayman":—

"The wind was a torrent of darkness among the gusty trees,
The moon was a ghostly galleon tossed upon cloudy seas,
The road was a ribbon of moonlight over the purple moor,
And the highwayman came riding—riding—riding—
And the highwayman came riding, up to the old inn-door."

Henry Van Dyke is the most prominent nature poet of the present. He sees nature from the point of view not only of the artist, but also of the musician. His bird songs, his poem, "The Fall of the Leaves," and his "Ode—God of the Open Air," are evidences of his love of nature and his power of depicting it. Here is a little poem of Van Dyke's, called "School":—

"I put my heart to school
In the world where men grow wise:
'Go out,' I said, 'and learn the rule;
Come back when you win a prize.'

"My heart came back again:
'Now where is the prize?' I cried.
'The rule was false, and the prize was pain,
And the teacher's name was Pride.'

"I put my heart to school
In the woods where verities sing,
And brooks run clear and cool,
In the fields where wild flowers spring.

"And why do you stay so long,
My heart, and where do you roam?"
The answer came with a laugh and a song,—
'I find this school is home.'"

There are many other nature poets, some of whom write purely about nature and some of whom have a great variety of topics. Among these latter are John Masfield, Robert Frost, Sara Teasdale, and Robert Service.

Leaving the nature poets, we take up the poets of the people and their problems. By far the most popular poetry of to-day is, of course, war poetry, but we find that the tone of this poetry is entirely different from the martial spirit of "The Charge of the Light Brigade" and the "Battle Hymn of the Republic." There is a strong feeling of the horror and sadness of war, and a looking forward to a better way in the years to come, in much of the war verse. Among the many poets whom the war has inspired, the best known are Rupert Brooke and Alan Seeger. Perhaps these two poets have received more praise than we have deserved, on account of their tragic death, but we cannot doubt that Brooke's sonnets and Seeger's poem, "I Have a Rendezvous with Death," will be considered real poetry in future years as well as now. Nathan Haskell Dole, Lawrence Binyon and Josephine Preston Peabody are also well-known war poets.

Quite as many poets are interested in the industrial situation, the "War at Home," as are absorbed in the war itself. Margaret Widdemer's "God and the Strong Ones" shows the strong sympathy which is being felt for the down-trodden masses who have so long been deprived of every joy of existence. The English poet, William Wilfrid Gibson, has lived among the poor miners and fishermen of England and has painted vivid pictures of their sorrows and passions. And the highest stage of feeling, that of a love for all the world, is shown in the poems of the Hindu philosopher, Rabindranath Tagore.

To both these classes of lovers of nature and lovers of humanity do the Imagists and the other revolutionary poets who preceded them, belong, yet they are animated by ideals which are different from the ideals of other poets. Amy Lowell, in her book, "Tendencies in Modern American Poetry," says that this revolutionary movement really began with Edgar Allan Poe and Walt Whitman, but that they were "too far ahead of their times to have much effect on their contemporaries." Then came the Irish poet, Yeats, and Edwin Arlington Robinson in America, who took the first step in definitely breaking away from tradition. Robinson and the New Englander, Robert Frost, set up the standards of realism and absolute simplicity of speech which the Imagists have followed. Edgar Lee Masters and Carl Sandburg form the connecting link between Frost and Robinson, and the Imagists. The poets of this middle stage care almost nothing about artistic beauty; they are too much occupied with telling the bald truth.

The Imagists, on the other hand, have felt the Chinese and Japanese influence in literature, and often choose artistically beautiful subjects, although their methods of writing are so unusual that most people can see little beauty in their poetry. The Imagists are the most radical of the modern poets. Their six leading representatives are three Englishmen, Richard Aldington, F. S. Flint, and D. H. Lawrence, and three Americans, Amy Lowell, John Gould Fletcher, and the lady who writes under the title of "H. D." These six poets have joined in publishing the anthology, "Some Imagist Poets," which has appeared for 1915, 1916 and 1917. In the preface of this collection they have set down six principles which they have agreed upon. These rules, as given by Amy Lowell, are:—

"1. To use the language of common speech, but to employ always the exact word, not the nearly exact, nor the merely decorative word.

"2. To create new rhythms—as the expression of new moods—and not to copy old rhythms, which merely echo old moods. We do not insist upon 'free-verse,' as the only method of writing poetry. We fight for it as for a principle of liberty. We believe that the individuality of a poet may often be better expressed in free-verse than in conventional forms. In poetry a new cadence means a new idea.

"3. To allow absolute freedom in the choice of subjects. It is not good art to write badly of aeroplanes and automobiles, nor is it necessarily bad art to write well about the past. We believe passionately in the artistic value of modern life, but we wish to point out that there is nothing so uninspiring nor so old-fashioned as an aeroplane of the year 1911.

"4. To present an image (hence the name "Imagist"). We are not a school of painters, but we believe that poetry should render particulars exactly and not deal in vague generalities, however magnificent and sonorous. It is for this reason that we oppose the cosmic poet, who seems to us to shirk the real difficulties of his art.

"5. To produce poetry that is hard and clear, never blurred nor indefinite.

"6. Finally, most of us believe that concentration is of the very essence of poetry."

The Imagists abhor the use of inversions and words which they call clichés. Cliché is the French word meaning "stamped," and refers to long-used and worn-out expressions such as those in the passage:—

"To ope my eyes
Upon the Ethiöpe splendour
Of the spangled night."

To be sure, all good English teachers urge their pupils to avoid such expressions, and the Imagists cannot and do not claim to be original in some of their fundamental ideas. The objection which is raised against the Imagists is not so much that their principles are wrong, but that they do not write real poetry. Some of the Imagist "poems" are good prose, but we cannot quite see why they are called poetry. Some of the vers libre, or free verse, is not at all like prose, but is called cadenced verse, and is made up of descriptive phrases, with a great deal of repetition. The first verse of "The City of Falling Leaves," by Amy Lowell, illustrates this:—

"Leaves fall,
Brown leaves,
Yellow leaves streaked with brown.
They fall,
Flutter,
Fall again.
The brown leaves,
And the streaked yellow leaves,
Loosen on their branches
And drift slowly downwards.
One,
One, two, three,
One, two, five,
All Venice is a falling of Autumn leaves—
Brown,
And yellow streaked with brown."

It is hard to believe that this kind of writing will long be considered real poetry, but revolution from cold, stereotyped forms has always in the past and, we hope, will now bring the deepening of real feeling and the love of truth and beauty, which make the world a better place to live in.

More characteristic of modern poetry, however, are the following lines from Robert Frost's "The Birches," with their simplicity and detailed description:—

"When I see birches bend to left and right
Across the line of straighter darker trees,
I like to think some boy's been swinging them.
But swinging doesn't bend them down to stay,
Ice storms do that. Often you must have seen them
Loaded with ice a sunny Winter morning
After a rain. They click upon themselves
As the breeze rises, and turn many-colored
As the stir cracks and crazes their enamel.
Soon the sun's warmth makes them shed crystal shells
Shattering and avalanching on the snow-crust—
Such heaps of broken glass to sweep away
You'd think the inner dome of heaven had fallen.

CHRIST'S KINGDOM ON EARTH.

(Concluded from page 702.)

But not so when in disregard of this testimony such action is suggested and proceeded in, in the will, wisdom, way and time of the creature, not as an act of faith (for as relates to all religious action, it must be of faith in order to escape the appellation of sin), but simply from a casual sight of the need and superficial sense of its requirement, an intellectual effort put forth in a good cause, but not being of Divine prompting, it cannot succeed, no more than did King Saul's making sacrifice before the prophet came, serve the purpose for which he professed to make it, and it lost him his crown, as also his life. But as has been all down through the ages of Christendom, ever since the day Jesus Christ, after His crucifixion, ascended up on high, led captivity captive, and received gifts for men, that many professors it seems either from lack of obedience to see and accept the need, or desire to avoid the humiliating process of qualification to serve Him acceptably through these, chose to disregard the gift and essayed to serve Him in ways of their own choosing, to gain an entrance into the sheepfold by other ways than by Christ, the door. As a corrective of these misconceptions see (Romans xi: 29, John xiv: 6). As relates to progress in spiritual attainment, whether individually or collectively, the Saviour's admonition, viz.:—"Without Me ye can do nothing" remains true and applies as when first uttered by Him. Having pursued the subject of the exaltation and spread of Christ's Kingdom on earth by the presentation and illustration of the way of its accomplishment, with some notice of the failure of effort out of harmony therewith, it remains with me in conclusion to express the fervent desire I have that all who may read these lines of whatever class, whether with or without a name as to religion, may be enabled to seriously consider the responsibility that attaches to each one individually as having a being in this life, our probationary state of existence, so that each may wisely exercise his or her free agency to choose the good and refuse the evil, and that "Friends," especially everywhere may be enabled to see and feel the need of entire loyalty to our high and holy profession in its original purity and simplicity. This profession as held, promulgated and suffered for, by our worthy predecessors in the beginning, as primitive Christianity revived, embraces in its entirety the Gospel plan of regeneration and salvation. For only as it is, so shall we be numbered with them in blessing and honor, a blessing amply attested by the remarkable perseverance in faithfulness and constancy in suffering, even unto death in large numbers, for the liberties and privileges which it has been ours as a people for a long season to enjoy, but which now in this momentous day and time are being and are likely to be still more curtailed, so that entire faithfulness to our calling and mission seems pre-eminently the watchword.

For if as Friends we fail to occupy the place assigned us by our blessed and glorified Head, there will in the Divine economy be found no place for us and our identity will be lost, lost on account of our failure as a Society to continue to display the banner given us because of the truth, upon which is indelibly inscribed Truth's testimonies, in characters of suffering and blood, the priceless legacy of our forefathers.

Many whose duty it would seem to be to bear aloft this standard of righteousness, have too much, it is feared, deserted their posts and perhaps are generally more or less zealously employed in the many varied and popular ways of world betterment, ways distinguished from the way of the law and the testimony, which properly appeals to all Christians, as originating in the human consciousness rather than from the law of the spirit of Life in Christ Jesus, which makes free from the law of sin and death (see Romans viii: 2), and from which proceed Truth's testimonies, which are God's witness against the abounding evils and excesses of every kind and character. The worldly honor and prestige should it be gained in the lines of service of human choice and appointment, will be found a very poor and unsatisfying substitute for the reward God rightly bestows upon all who faithfully serve Him, in the way of His testimonies—the cross-bearing life which alone leads to the crown-bearing attainment. However regrettable the fact of the degenerate condition referred to, it is with the cherished thought in view that the effort may lead to its being thoughtfully considered by those to whom it appeals and may come that this has been written. If so the writer's purpose shall have been answered and he can cheerfully leave the rest with Him who continues to bless and blast at His pleasure, to bless the good and blast the evil, trusting that He will in His own good time and way so manifest this, His prerogative to the honest-hearted yet in the background, that it may in time be more generally recognized that it is God's works that praise Him.

Amongst the many discouragements with which we as a people are beset, it is cheering to remember that there is still a remnant preserved on the ancient, true and tried foundation, and may we not confidently hope that from this nucleus there will be continued in the line of succession a people to whom the remarkable prophetic declaration of Francis Howgill, one of the ancient worthies who sealed his testimony with his blood, will aptly apply, it may be found in print in Sewell's History, Volume 2, page 14, in part as follows, "The sun shall leave its shining brightness, and cease to give light to the world, the moon shall be altogether darkness and give no light unto the night, the stars shall cease to know their office or place, my covenant with day, night, times and seasons shall sooner come to an end, than my covenant with this people into which they have entered with me, shall end or be broken." Such marked recognition of His loyal subjects by the Supreme King over all stamps His approval upon them as the fitting representatives of His Kingdom upon earth, and should tend to an increase of faith and confidence that it will become universal in His own good time, when in accord with ancient prophecy, "The earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea." "And the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord and His Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever." (Rev. vi: 15).

BARNESVILLE, OHIO, Fifth Month 17, 1918.

LATEST CABLE FROM RUSSIA.

Recently received cables supplement the reports brought back by workers who are now in this country on furlough, concerning the present situation in our Russian work. The work of famine relief has become the most urgent. The failure of crops for the past two years and the inability of the refugees, through lack of money and transportation facilities, to secure seed grain, has produced a very serious food shortage in the section where we are working.

In famine relief the great fundamental need is for funds,—and in very large amounts. Medical and hospital work, care of children, distribution of clothing; operation of work-rooms, etc., can be carried on without much expense beyond the maintenance of the workers. To buy food in large quantities, however, for a starving population and to bring it from a distance requires money and then more money. Not mere comfort, nor even health, but life itself, is at stake under famine conditions. We have sent $25,000 for this famine relief, and at last report English Friends had raised over $60,000.

One of the most important statements of the cable is the reference to the placing of the refugees upon the land either in Samara or farther east in Siberia. Up to the present the refugees, who had settled down (usually as unwelcome guests) upon the native peasants, had had no opportunity for raising their own food. The demobilization of the army has made possible the return of many men to their families. The problem of re-establishing family life and earning an independent living from the soil has thus become paramount. The devastated homes of most of the refugees are in the extreme western provinces, where conditions are too unsettled to admit of their return. The cable indicates that a scheme with great possibilities is being developed whereby these families can establish new homes either in the province of Samara in European Russia, or just across the line in western Siberia.

History is now being written very rapidly and with a large hand in Russia. Friends everywhere should feel the thrill and respond to the challenge of this opportunity of having a part in the writing. Our mission has no connection with the political aspects of this history. Our part is an obscure one of saving life, restoring normal living conditions, bringing new opportunities to a few thousands of people who have been uprooted entirely from the homes of their fathers. It is work of fundamental importance; it embodies the very essence of the Christian Gospel of loving service; through it, we in America can help in the relief of a distress, not equalled perhaps in this or in any other war. The work in France seems to be our primary obligation and none of our opportunities there will be neglected. The need in Russia, however, is so much more vast that many Friends may feel called to increase their contributions in order that we may meet these opportunities also. At last report the Friends' Mission is the only relief expedition now actively engaged in any part of Russia. The American Red Cross and our State Department have expressed great interest in the continuance on the largest possible scale of this centre of American influence.

V. D. N.

"LOVE."

'Tis not the deed we do
 Though the deed be never so fair,
 But the love that the dear Lord looks for,
 Hidden with lovely care
 In the heart of the deed so fair.

The love is the priceless thing;
 The treasure our treasures must hold,
 Ere ever the Lord will take the gift,
 Or tell the worth of the gold
 By the love that cannot be told.

—CHRISTINA ROSSETTI.

LETTERS FROM FRANCE.

VENEDREI, Fourth Month 5, 1918.

It wouldn't be fair to put any definite location on this letter, for it will be a diary of places as well as times. Just at present we are lying just outside the station at Marseilles with various trains on all sides and there is nothing interesting to look at whatever—therefore the present pity!

My last letter has given the beginnings of our work with the old people who are now en route to the south coast of France, and although there was quite a lack of organization we managed finally to bundle them into the cars and start. It is a regular ambulance train, with a French doctor and an attendant (man) for each car; the cuisine is prepared in a specially-fitted car and all in all the equipment is quite complete. The peculiar part about the whole affair is—why were we three fellows asked to come? Certainly the regular attendants are a capable set, and although our three ladies are very useful in attending to the special needs of some few old women, we men have had very little to do except give the folks a cheery word and a glad hand at occasional stops. The peculiar contentedness of the inhabitants—here we go again—Toulan this time. The contentedness of the people is due to the fact that it is a decided novelty to get out of their little villages; then, too, they are getting plenty of their beloved clear soup and bread; the heating system is operating well so that they are all warm, night and day; and finally there are a number who are feeble-minded, who don't know enough to be dissatisfied.

The ride from Marseilles has been a delightful one along the Mediterranean; the great foothills (of the Alps, probably) have gradually enveloped us and come between us and the water, giving way every few minutes to open up a glorious vista that holds a thousand aspects of novelty—flowers, fruit trees in bloom, terraced hill-slopes with the invariable rows and rows of small, low grape-vines; orchards, some regular and others just promiscuous, of odd, gnarled-limbed, gray-leaved olive-trees ("Bible-trees" I call them), and scattered across the little valleys are the red-roofed peasant homes and buildings that lend a little gaiety and human atmosphere. The coast is everywhere shouldered aside by bald, massive, impatient rocky headlands that set up a sort of unchanging background for a hundred little nearer changes of scenery. The sea is not nearly so blue to-day as it might be, because the clouds are heavy, hanging gravely around the rough hill-tops, but even so, the contrast after the absolutely flat treeless Somme is wonderfully restful.

CANNES.

What a fairyland! We woke up this morning looking out of the hotel window into a clear, bright sky over a long high-cliffed island, and with the unruffled blue water of the Mediterranean lying between. At our feet are the hotel gardens and lawns that in peaceful times have fairly swarmed with pleasure-seekers and roamers over the world. Great palms are holding their bushy tops above the dark-foliaged pines, and the gardens are brightly full of blossoms. It must all be still a dream.

Coming into Cannes last evening we had hoped that our little group could really do a little work simply to justify our presence on board, and fortunately we were able to do something in getting the poor old folks unloaded and repacked into autos after a sip of hot wine or coffee. They were still patient and cheerful in most cases and we were also somewhat cheered by finding that all plans had been made at this end by a great, good-natured (and apparently well-off) gentleman representing the Red Cross. He was a minister in a Washington, D. C., church for some years, but has been over here for a number of years also, and has a beautiful villa along the seaside. Naturally when he found that we hadn't been in bed for two nights he sent his chauffeur off to locate places for us in a comfortable hotel—and he succeeded!

The next day we had tea at his villa, where he showed us around his gardens. Before the war he used to have twelve gardeners busy there all the time, and it was evident that he took nearly as much pride in the rare plants and trees from all around the tropics, as did the original owner, who had collected all the exceptional specimens. Perhaps it wouldn't have seemed so marvelous to one more used to tropical gardens, but the great stretches of carefully trimmed flower beds, the little nooks with a tiny stream and the heavy-leaved swamp plants; the rubber and lemon trees, the tree ferns, the lilies, and numbers of plants I had never seen before—made it a veritable garden of delight for me. I forgot to mention that we passed through a region north of Cannes on the train, where there were actual fields of paper-whites and narcissus, and great plots of pansies—all one color. The broad-sides were everywhere brilliant with wild yellow primroses, and occasionally there would be scatterings of graceful white and purple iris. Every hillside seemed to have some sort of blossom to show, and several valleys were absolutely white with cherry-trees in bloom. Roses, too, are beginning to show their brilliance, mocking, as it were, the grace and delicate lavender of wisteria draped over arbors and around the tall, bare palm trunks. Is it any wonder that with sights like these and the snow-crowned lower Alps in the distance, we were somewhat pleased that it had fallen to our particular lot to accompany this train?

We had two-and-a-half days in this beautiful little city, walking all along the water-front, and up on the hill behind the many elaborate villas, from where we could look out across the harbor to an ancient tower on an island, where St. Patrick is said to have received part of his education.

There was a sort of large "rest-room" down near the shore where all visiting soldiers can make themselves at home, and dropping in one afternoon I found a very pleasant lady there from Philadelphia, and an American chap (who had been gassed at Verdun) who had an excellent voice. Needless to say we enjoyed a four o'clock tea and about an hour of their company.

This big Red Cross man came to our rescue again in departing, by giving us a letter which obtained free passage for us on the fastest train to Paris (all first class), and having seen the old folks safely taken care of, we thoroughly enjoyed most of the trip back to Paris, although we didn't get much sleep. At any rate, it has been a wonderfully interesting trip for me, and also enjoyable after our more or less depressing exit from the Somme.

There was a peculiar incident occurred on the way down when we stopped at a little station whose name I recognized as connected with American troops. Seeing several fellows on the station platform, I asked one of them whether such and such a school was anywhere near and if he knew a Cornell friend of mine who had written to me not many weeks ago. He said that Hough was in his own battalion and was at that minute only a mile-and-a-half away! Unfortunately we weren't stopping but a few minutes, or I might have seen the chap (who happened to be one of the boys in the House during my junior year).

Did I mention that Cousin Frances Ferris was with our party to Cannes? However, since I was acting treasurer and business manager for the group, I received some excellent practice in French as well as all the other pleasures. We all have a regular vacation due any time now and we must start planning for that if no urgent work turns up. A bicycle trip sounds interesting if it gets a little warmer. PARVIN M. RUSSELL.

NEWS ITEMS.

FULL reports of London Yearly Meeting are promised us in The Friend [London] for Fifth Month 31 and Sixth Month 6. Just as we go to press the former of these numbers reaches us. We plan to give a generous review in our next issue, even if it necessitates a double number.—[Eds.]

WM. B. HARVEY spent the week from the eighteenth to the twenty-second with Friends at Woodland, N. C., in the interests of the problems confronting the C. O.'s there. He also visited Camp Jackson, S. C.

ALICE G. LEWIS expects to sail from Japan on Seventh Month 3rd in the Tengo Maru. Anyone desiring to send steamer letters to our returning missionaries, Gilbert and M. P. Bowles, also Edith Newlin and Sato San, should address, "Shinyo Maru," T. K. K., San Francisco, California, before Eighth Month 21, which is the date on which the steamer is supposed to leave.

PURPOSE OF OUR MISSION IN FRANCE.—(Minute of the French Field Committee resulting from a concern of some workers for such an official statement.)—"The desire of the Society of Friends to relieve the sufferings of civil populations in time of war has found frequent practical expression in the past; and it was in accord with our traditions that a concern was laid before the Meeting for Sufferings of London Yearly Meeting in the early days of the war that an expedition should be sent to France for this purpose. The way was opened by the French Government, largely because of its remembrance of the work done by Friends during the Franco-Prussian War in 1870-71, when the red and black star was first worn by our workers.

The misery and devastation caused by the present war call for the strongest and most self-sacrificing efforts which we can put forward to mitigate it, and the object of the Mission is to bring relief and succor to the populations, especially of the invaded areas, as far as we can reach them.

This work is a natural outcome of the Peace Testimony of our Society, and we desire that our service shall be a positive expression of that spirit which takes away the occasion of all wars."

REPORT OF THE TREASURER OF THE AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE FOR WEEK ENDING SIXTH MONTH 22, 1918:

Received from 20 Meetings.....	$5,343.50
Received from 22 Individuals.....	794.00
Received for Armenian and Syrian Relief.....	34.00
Received for Supplies.....	22.55
Interest on Bonds.....	3.75
	$6,197.80

CHARLES F. JENKINS, Treasurer.

HEADLEY BROTHERS, London, announce for early publication a series of letters written by Corder Catchpool, one of our English Friends, while working with the Friends' Ambulance Unit in Flanders and later while suffering imprisonment for conscience' sake. The book will be entitled "On Two Fronts." Another book by an English Friend conscientious objector, is Maurice L. Ronntree's "Co-operation or Chaos," (6 d, net), which has attracted considerable interest and been twice reprinted. Copies of either of these may be ordered through Friends' Book Store, 304 Arch Street, Philadelphia.

The Survey for Fifth Month 18, 1918, published an article on the Red Cross village, Malabar, for tuberculous refugees, in which mention is made of the large part Friends are playing in this constructive work.

PLACES for eighty French girls have already been found for the next academic year in American colleges, by Robert L. Kelly, Executive Secretary of the Council of Church Boards of Education, who has the matter in charge. The plan is to bring one hundred girls from France to America for college work next year.

CHARLES EVANS writes from the Paris office: "Make a superhuman effort to get more men." Additional Men Workers.—Although we have been driven from our positions in the Aisne, Somme and Oise, the need for workers is greater than ever.

The Executive Committee felt last Autumn that no more men workers in addition to the twenty-five then asked for could be absorbed, but has now reconsidered the matter and they authorize me to ask you for seventy-five men to arrive at the rate of twenty-five per month for three months, and they also decided to ask England for ten a month for three months. You must try to get these men over, beginning again just as though you had not tried before.

It is true for every department of France south of battle lines that refugees are pouring in and every day the Bureaux of the Civil Affairs Department come to my desk with requests for men to go here and to go there. Make a superhuman effort to get the personnel, but concentrate on getting good men out of camp, as it is these conscientious chaps that we can use to best advantage.

TO THE REPRESENTATIVE MEETING:—

It may be taken for granted, that most, if not all, the members of this Body are familiar with the recent ruling of the War Department dated Fifth Month 30th, concerning conscientious objectors. As a matter of record, however, it may be well to state briefly that these men are to be sent to Fort Leavenworth, Kansas (though not under arrest), and there await examination by a Commission, comprising three men of national prominence, appointed by the War Department, as to their sincerity on these grounds. If satisfactory, they are to be furloughed, though not discharged, and they may then engage in agricultural pursuits outside their former home districts, or in Friends' Reconstruction Work abroad; they are expected to report monthly through disinterested parties to the War Department, are to work to the best of their ability, and cannot receive as compensation a sum greater than a private's pay plus subsistence.

As a matter of fact, the Commission has already begun its work in the military cantonments beginning at Camp Meade, Md. It has also visited Camp Dix.

At this writing, we are yet in doubt as to the exact method of turnover, and are not positive that our proposed Commission of nine men will be charged with the guardianship of the men under consideration; indications point that way.

Your Secretary has visited Camps Dix and Meade within the past week, finding conditions much as heretofore, though our members at the latter camp were under considerable exercise as a result of the recent Federal questioning alluded to above.

After an enforced truce at the camps varying from two to nine months, much of the time in what is practically enforced illness, it is natural that the patience of the "C. O.'s" is a good deal tried, for those at least in whom we are interested are most anxious to do their full share in meeting humanity's needs in ways their consciences will permit. Philadelphia Yearly Meeting has at present six members at Camp Dix, New Jersey, four at Camp Meade, Md., and one at Camp Lewis, Washington, held as conscientious objectors. Of this number, the last named is under the most unpleasant discipline—he being allowed no reading matter but the Bible, and all incoming and outgoing mail is censored. Correspondence is in progress, having in view a betterment of conditions in this case.

In addition to the above we have other members at Camp Lee, Va., who, though having resolved to refuse acceptance even of non-combatant service offered them, and who stood firmly on principle for a considerable length of time, yet, under the extreme pressure placed upon them by their military officers, finally accepted hospital work under the military rule. In this action, we surely cannot censure these young men for the action taken, particularly at that Camp, where our views are not at all appreciated.

This misunderstanding is likely to be no less apparent, as our nation becomes more and more engaged in the awful death struggle which is stirring the very foundations of Society the world over; and those of us, who are older grown, may have to share with our younger brethren in trials, which, though by no means welcome, are calculated to awaken our sympathies and deepen our faith in Him who still commands the destinies of nations, and Who will protect those who come to Him for guidance and support.

The scope of the work of our office has broadened; unexpected lines of work have opened, among them considerable correspondence with army officers, draft boards, etc., and many interviews with men of the same general type; we have felt grateful for the almost universal courtesy and toleration in the many instances which could be cited.

Our members, as well as men from other Yearly Meetings, with whom we have near sympathy, while at Fort Leavenworth, will naturally claim our sympathy and attention, for while it is likely those men at camps may not need to go to that prison, yet "C. O." men called later cannot escape detention at the Fort. Correspondence is in progress soliciting co-operation of Friends living in Kansas, who might assist us in giving whatever moral and other support is needed while proceedings are progressing, and this is not likely to be a service soon completed, for new men, holding our views, will be ordered to camps from month to month, all of whom must, be they ever so sincere, appear before the Commission for examination.

Visits to camps by ministers and others for some weeks were not encouraged on account of certain conditions pertaining therein: the tension seems now in large measure to have been removed, and it is our desire that Friends will consider well whether they owe it as a duty to our young men and the cause which they represent, to visit them as members in bonds: they will find a hearty welcome. At a recent canvass among our men in camp, we learn that nearly all have taken steps towards engaging in Friends' Reconstruction work abroad, and will expect to accept the service promptly if liberty is granted therefor.

WM. B. HARVEY

PHILADELPHIA, Sixth Month 21, 1918.

The following letter, addressed to the Western District Monthly Meeting, Philadelphia, has been sent us for insertion in THE FRIEND:—

SIXTH MONTH 14, 1918.

At thy suggestion, the following facts concerning the plans of the three Colored Schools are given for such use as seems advisable.

The plans for consolidating the work of the Anthony Benezet School, the Western District Colored School and the Joseph Sturge School have been progressing satisfactorily since the last report to our Monthly Meeting. The following Joint Committee has been appointed, consisting of representatives from each one of the three Schools:—

JOINT EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

Anthony Benezet School.—Mabel B. Hoyle, Horace E. Moore, Mary B. Test.

Western District Colored School.—Rebecca B. Wistar, Sara M. Longstreth, Flora L. Jacob.

Joseph Sturge Mission School.—Alfred G. Scattergood, Isaac P. Miller, D. R. Yarnall, Chairman.

At Large.—Paul D. I. Maier, Lucy Shelmore, Secretary.

This Joint Executive Committee is to have charge of the development of the plans and the expenditure of the Joint funds which will be turned over to a common treasurer who will shortly be appointed.

Through the kindness of interested Friends, funds are now available for making the necessary building changes and additions to provide for the extension of our work at 918 Locust Street. An architect has been employed and plans and specifications are in the course of preparation, so that we hope before the Autumn arrives, our quarters will be in such condition that some of the work can be started.

Sara M. Longstreth, Chairman of the Western District Colored School Committee, informs that their staff of teachers have been advised that the School will be laid down, as its work in another form will be carried on at 918 Locust Street, as soon as suitable quarters are available; this step having been taken in order to carry out the joint plans of the three Colored Schools.

Friends will recall that the Joint plan will provide for conducting a Day Nursery and Kindergarten, and for the extension of the present Visiting Work which has been conducted for many years both by the Anthony Benezet and the Joseph Sturge Schools. In addition, it is proposed to develop a domestic science department, along lines which will be helpful not only in training young colored people, but also in assisting in home economics and sanitation. The religions work which has been conducted by the Joseph Sturge School for many years will, of course, be continued as usual.

This new institution, when developed, we feel will be a most helpful one for the colored people living in the immediate neighborhood.

D. ROBERT YARNALL.

FRIENDS' SELECT SCHOOL NOTES.—The graduating exercises were held at the School on the afternoon of Sixth Month 14th, the Class Day entertainment having been given the evening before. Diplomats were given to fourteen graduates, and a certificate of work accomplished to one other member of the Senior Class who had not done all the work required for graduation. William V. Dennis, one of the teachers at the School, delivered the address to the Class.

Members of the graduating class are enrolled for college as follows:—two for Haverford, two for Swarthmore, and one each for Bryn Mawr, Drexel, Goucher, Vassar and Wellesley.

About a week before school closed, Ruth S. Goodwin gave an impressive address at morning collection on "The Meaning of the Flag," and on another day Robert R. Tatlock, lectured on "The Russian Revolution."

The new teachers for next year are Marguerite L. Brinton, of West Chester, who is a graduate of the Department of Hygiene at Wellesley College and is now teaching in the Y. W. C. A. in New York City, to be Director of Physical Education for Girls; Mary E. Williamson, of Media, a graduate of the West Chester Normal School, who has done considerable work at the University of Pennsylvania, to teach the "G" Class; Rachel Mstrom, of North Middleboro, Mass., a graduate of the Bridgewater Normal School, to teach classes "H" and "I"; and Marion D. Leeds, of Moorestown, a graduate of Westtown School, to be Assistant in the Primary Grades.

Several of the teachers expect to attend Summer schools. Mary Anna Jones, Mary E. Williamson, and Rachel Mstrom are to go to Columbia; Florence A. Elliott to Chantauqua; Anne Baderston to the Art School at Gloucester, Mass., and Caroline DeGreenne to the French and Art colony at Boothbay Harbor, Me. Walter W. Haviland expects to attend the convention of the National Education Association at Pittsburgh.

The Children's Country Week Association has been granted the use of the School dining-room in the basement, as the headquarters from which city children will be sent out into the country throughout the Summer.

TIRED OF GIVING?—Let the following letter inspire us to give in a manner commensurate with our comforts, and our abilities to give:

"AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE, Philadelphia, Pa.—

Dear Friends—Among the many interesting features of our segregation is our Sabbath School. This was opened early in the year, and has been kept up to the present time. The hour for meeting is ten o'clock. The attendance is chiefly made up, of course, of the members of the segregated body, but on a good many occasions there have been ten to fifteen visitors. In fact, a leading member of the school is a soldier boy from the Artillery Division. He is a real live wire in a Sabbath School and has acted as superintendent at several meetings. These visitors have always been welcome and their attendance and interest have been greatly encouraging to us. The order recently given out by the Divisional Commander, General Bailey, will, however, debar such attendance.

Up to our last meeting there has been one thing peculiar about our class program—no collection was ever taken, for our people at home have been so generous and thoughtful as to supply us each quarter with a few copies of our Friends' Quarterly and other expenses of course have been unnecessary.

"Profiting by the unneeded mistake of the rich young ruler about whom we studied last week, and endeavoring to profit by his example and to comply with the call of our gracious Master, we found this our opportunity to break up the peculiarity of our class work by taking an offering for the relief of our unfortunate terror-stricken neighbors in the devastated regions of France. And we are enclosing herewith a twenty-dollar money order made up in a Sabbath School of nineteen conscientious objectors at Camp Jackson, South Carolina.

"We are proud of the opportunity to make this sacrifice for a cause so Christian in its scope and purpose and wish to express our unwavering faith in the Golden Text of the day's lesson: 'Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you.'

"The Camp Jackson Sabbath School of Conscientious Objectors,
"PET HARVEY D. HENSHAW, MARVIN H. SHORE."

A DOCUMENT entitled "Some Social Aspects of the Society of Friends in the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Centuries" has been printed in Ohio, and appears now in the form of a neat pamphlet. The title-page informs us that the essay is a thesis "submitted to the Faculty of the University of Chicago in candidacy for the degree of Master of Arts" in the Spring of 1914, by Alice Heald Mendenhall. The bibliography from which it was drawn is pretty large, and it seems to have been mainly supplied by the University library. Various topics are touched upon briefly, the treatment being, of course, rather suggestive than exhaustive. There are illuminating sketches of some of the most prominent and active Friends, from George Fox to Elizabeth Fry, and we get some insight into the scope of their labors from the presentation of such subjects as George Fox's interest in the establishment of institutions for the care of the insane and for "poor Friends that are past work," John Bellers' pioneer labors in social and political economy, and William Penn's "pure food laws," besides other philanthropic and humanitarian enterprises more familiar to many readers.

The author has done a timely and acceptable service in this compilation, and the Friends' Educational Association in Ohio has furthered it by printing and circulating the pamphlet. Copies may be had at two cents each, or fifteen cents per dozen, by sending to Edward F. Stratton, 113 East Seventh Street, Salem, Ohio. M. W.

FRIENDS' SERVICE NOTES.—We have frequent inquiries as to the Bulletins issued by the Committee. Following is a list of those issued to date. Only a few (Nos. 2, 3, 8 and 14) have been distributed to every family. The others have been issued only to local Service Committees, Sewing Clubs, etc.

1. Suggestions as to Local Organization. (Out of Print.)
2. Financial Appeal. (Out of Print.)
3. General Description of the Work. (Out of Print.)
4. Sewing and Knitting. (Out of Print.)
5. Canning and Drying. (Out of Print.)
6. Final Report of Our Investigating Commission to France.
7. Reprint of Pictures from Pictorial Review for Tenth Month, 1917.
8. Six Months of Friends' War Relief Service.
9. Sewing Bulletin (Superseded by No. 13.)
10. Knitting Directions.
11. Report of Finance Committee, Fifth Month 1, 1917, to Second Month 1, 1918.
12. a, b, c, d, e. Sewing Directions.
13. General Bulletin for Sewing Clubs.
14. Relation to Second Red Cross $100,000,000 Campaign.

FEEDING AND CLOTHING TRAIN-LOADS OF REFUGEES.—"I came here last week with a colleague, M. Verne, to inquire into the lot of the refugees from the Somme and the Oise. We found refugees pouring into Louviers in great quantities and in most unhappy conditions. Local people were anxious to help, but lacked the means with which to give assistance. I decided to stay and do what I could while M. Verne returned to Paris to look for supplies. I have put in a busy week getting food and clothing and medicaments and distributing them in various cantonments where refugees are temporarily fed and housed; feeding those who pass through on great trains; and most difficult of all, making up trains to convey great numbers of refugees to other points.

"We sent a train of 600 to Avignon and another of 912 to Carcassonne. Happily, Chas. Evans responded to my request for Bill Southworth and I was able to send Bill with the second train. Otherwise the old folks and the little children and the two or three crazy people who were on the train would have suffered for want of attention during the long trip. (Many of them had already traveled eight or nine days.)

"As M. Verne and I are responsible for a large department (The Evre), where there are thousands of refugees who are here for good I shall be busy for a long time. So my conscience is tranquil so far as work is concerned. People are suffering and in need. I can help them and am doing my best. So I have every reason to be satisfied."

(Signed) CARROLL BINDER.

REFUGEE WAS MADE IN A FORMER ISSUE OF THE FRIEND to the identity of Israel Whelan. The following has been received from a subscriber who knows wherof he speaks.

Israel Whelan lived at the corner of Fifth and High (Marked) Streets. He was an authority on banking and finances and a shipping merchant of large resources. He became Commissary General of the Continental Army during the Revolution, feeling that it was right to "assist lawless tyranny bearing down all before it." He is buried in Friends' Burying Ground at Fourth and Arch Streets. He was the head of the Electoral College that chose John Adams President when the Electoral College really did the selecting. He was the third President of the Philadelphia Stock Exchange. In 1793 he moved to High above Eighth Street and had his place of business at the northwest corner of Fourth and High. The present banking house of Townsend, Whelan & Company is the descendant of his business.

NOTICES.

PERSONS desiring to subscribe for the paper called "Reconstruction" will please write to and make checks for $1.00 payable to

VINCENT D. NICHOLSON,
20 S. Twelfth Street, Philadelphia.

FRIENDS' SELECT SCHOOL NOTICE.—Applications for admission should be made as early as possible. Catalogues will be furnished on application to the Principal, who will be glad to confer or correspond with parents. The next year opens Ninth Month 23rd.

WALTER W. HAVILAND, Principal,
140 N. Sixteenth Street, Philadelphia.

FRIENDS' LIBRARY, 142 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILADELPHIA.—During Seventh and Eighth Months Friends' Library will be closed, except on Fifth-days, from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M.

LINDA A. MOORE,
Librarian.

FRIENDS' LIBRARY, 142 N. SIXTEENTH STREET, PHILADELPHIA.—The following books have recently been added to Friends' Library:—

- Bruce—Handicaps of Childhood.
 - Dykes & Standing—Man Who Chooses Poverty.
 - Hodgkin—Book of Quaker Saints.
 - Morley—Recollections.
 - Muir—Cruise of the Crown.
 - Petrie—Revolutions of Civilization.
 - Sharpless—Story of a Small College.
 - Stewart—Life of St. Francis Xavier.
 - Wheeler—Boy with the U. S. Weather Men.
 - Wild—Evolution of the Hebrew People.
- During Seventh and Eighth Months Friends' Library will be closed except on Fifth-days, from 9 A. M. to 1 P. M.

LINDA A. MOORE,
Librarian.

MORNING meetings for worship at Woodbury, N. J., now begin at 10.30 o'clock.

MEETINGS from Sixth Month 30th to Seventh Month 6th:—

- Gwynedd Monthly Meeting, at Norristown, First-day, Sixth Month 30th, at 10.30 A. M.
- Kennett, at Kennett Square, Third-day, Seventh Month 2nd, at 10 A. M.
- Chesterfield, at Trenton, Third-day, Seventh Month 2nd, at 10 A. M.
- Chester, N. J., at Moorestown, Third-day, Seventh Month 2nd, at 7.30 P. M.
- Bradford, at Coatesville, Fourth-day, Seventh Month 3rd, at 10 A. M.
- New Garden, at Westgrove, Fourth-day, Seventh Month 3rd, at 10 A. M.
- Upper Springfield, at Mansfield, Fourth-day, Seventh Month 3rd, at 10 A. M.
- Haddonfield, Fourth-day, Seventh Month 3rd, at 7.30 P. M.
- Wilmington, Fifth-day, Seventh Month 4th, at 7.30 P. M.
- Uwchlan, at Downingtown, Fifth-day, Seventh Month 4th, at 10.30 A. M.
- London Grove, Fifth-day, Seventh Month 4th, at 10 A. M.
- Falls, at Fallsington, Fifth-day, Seventh Month 4th, at 7.30 P. M.
- Evesham, at Mt. Laurel, Fifth-day, Seventh Month 4th, at 10 A. M.
- Upper Evesham, at Medford, Seventh-day, Seventh Month 6th, at 10 A. M.

DIED.—At his home, Atlantic City, N. J., Second Month 26, 1918, HENRY DARNELL, aged seventy-two years; a member of Evesham Monthly Meeting, N. J.

—, at his home near Barnesville, Ohio, on the third of Sixth Month, 1918, JOHN G. HALL, son of John and Hannah Hall, late of England, in the seventy-fifth year of his age; a member and minister of Somerset Monthly and Ridge Particular Meetings, Ohio.

Founded 1865
THE PROVIDENT
Life and Trust Company
of Philadelphia

Will life be worth living at 65?

Doesn't it depend largely upon whether you have an income?

Look up the Provident Income Insurance
Fourth and Chestnut Streets

H. F. BRUNER S. D. HALL

H. F. BRUNER & Co.
COAL

OFFICE AND YARD

16 N. TWENTY-FIRST STREET
PHILADELPHIA

TELEPHONES: } LOCUST 243
 } RACK 661

Friends Arch St. Centre
304 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Provides comfortable accommodations for guests by the day or week. Meals at moderate prices.

AMELIA D. FEATHERSTONE, Matron.

PHONE—MARKET 1571.

WM. H. PILE'S SONS

BOOK AND JOB PRINTING

422 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SPECIAL ATTENTION GIVEN TO THE
PRINTING OF BOOKS AND CATALOGS

GLASLYN-CHATHAM

PARK PLACE

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.

A Family House of Established Reputation.
Open Throughout the Year.

NATHAN L. JONES.

ALBERT C. RIDLEY
1714 SANSOM STREET

Engraving and Printing
FINE BUSINESS STATIONERY
Wedding Invitations, Calling Cards, Greeting Cards, Die Stamped Writing Paper
TELEPHONE—LOCUST 1782

Premier Duplicating Co.

Mimeographing, Multigraphing, Printing, Typewriting, Addressing, Mailing, etc.

630 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

POCONO MANOR INN
POCONO MANOR, PA.

SPRINGTIME in the Pocono Mountains is ever a delight to those who admire and study nature. The Birds and Flowers are numerous and varied, and the Trout Fishing in the Swiftwater is wonderful.

J. W. HURLEY, Manager
(Pocono Summit Station, D. L. & W. R. R.)

WOOLMAN SCHOOL

A Friends' School for Social and Religious Education.

Six Weeks Summer Term:
Seventh Month 1—Eighth Month 10, 1918.

Courses in Hebrew Prophecy, Teaching of Jesus, History of the Nineteenth Century, Social Service, First-day School Teaching for Children and Adolescents, The Bible in the Schools, and Internationalism.

Send for Circular.

ELBERT RUSSELL, Director,
WOOLMAN SCHOOL,
SWARTHMORE, PA.

W. B. WEAVER
UNDERTAKER and EMBALMER

550-552 N. 5th St., PHILA., PA.

Special Attention Given to Funerals
In and Out of the City. Also Chapel
Accommodations for Funerals.

BELL 'PHONE : ESTABLISHED 1880

To enjoy good health and a sound digestion use
PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT BREAD
made from the entire wheat grain ground on a stone mill. A perfect food and natural regulator. Sold by all good grocers in Philadelphia.

Write for particulars to

PERFECTION WHOLE WHEAT CO.
10th & Susquehanna Ave., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

WALL PAPERS—All Grades

Custom of Friends Specially Selected

FRANK C. BUEHL

Successor to S. F. BALDERSTON'S SON
902 SPRING GARDEN ST. — PHILADELPHIA

Store open until 10.30 A. M. Any other times by appointment only
Opposite Spring Garden Station, Phila. & Reading R. R.

ESTABLISHED 1849. BELL 'PHONE.

"FRIENDS AND THE INDIANS"
FOR SALE AT $1.50 BY

FRIENDS' BOOK STORE
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

HARRY S. LEE

313 WALNUT STREET

PAINTER AND GRAINER

ANTIQUE and OFFICE FURNITURE RESTORED
JOBING PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO

ESTIMATES

BUSINESS men who are looking for a new printing connection are invited to get acquainted with
THE HOLMES PRESS
J. Linton Eagle, Pres.
1336 Cherry Street, Philadelphia

JOSEPH C. FOGG
FUNERAL DIRECTOR and EMBALMER

S. W. Cor. Sixteenth and Race Streets
Special attention given to Friends' Funerals
Bell 'Phone " Spruce 1446

BACK LOG CAMP

INDIAN LAKE, N. Y.

In the heart of the Adirondacks.

The name Back Log Camp means a great deal to many people. We shall be glad to send our booklet to any one who is interested in the latest development of the Back Log idea.

THOMAS K. BROWN.

The Lakeside

Eagles Mere, Pa.

Superior location, overlooking the beautiful lake, 2200 feet above the sea level. Sailing, boating, bathing, tennis and golf. House heated by steam, elevator, electric bells, private baths, hot and cold running water in a large number of rooms. Garage. Personal management. Send for booklet.

J. S. KIRK & SON, Proprietors.

WANTED—BY AN EXPERIENCED TEACHER of expression and public speaking, a position in a private or Friends' School for two or three days each week. Excellent references.

Address A.

"THE FRIEND," 207 Walnut Place.

WANTED—IMMEDIATELY—A STENOGRAPHER. Will pay prevailing rate of salary.

AMERICAN FRIENDS' SERVICE COMMITTEE,
20 South 12th Street, Phila., Pa.

WANTED—A POSITION AS COMPANION, CARE of an invalid, or as housekeeper.

Address E.

55 East Stewart Avenue,
Lansdowne, Pa.

WANTED—BY A YOUNG WOMAN, A RECENT Westwood Graduate, a position as caretaker of Children or companion to an elderly person.

Address R.

"THE FRIEND."

TO ADVERTISERS.—THE FRIEND is open for selected advertisements at the following rates: One inch, 50 cents, or 4 cents a line; no insertion for less than 25 cents. Long term rates given on application. Standing business cards are also solicited.

Cheyney Institute

offers an opportunity each year to one hundred picked colored youths to train themselves in leadership. No people have a more just claim on the sympathy and help of others than those colored people who have faith in the future of their race through wise training.

Cheyney Institute offers this training and has proved by its graduates that it merits generous support.

The Managers endeavor to administer the Trust they have assumed, but must look to Friends and others for financial assistance in the work for these one hundred young men and women.

The Institute also offers a unique course for teachers in its Summer School. Most of the Eastern and Southern States are represented at this School and testimonials of the advantages gained from the Summer courses would satisfy the most skeptical.

Leslie P. Hill, Principal, is always ready to offer timely suggestions to any who have it on their hearts to assist in the laudable work that is carried on at Cheyney.

Because of the conditions which must be met, if the School is to continue its good work, the Board of Managers feel free to request Friends to include Cheyney among the charities to which they contribute, and ask that checks shall be drawn in favor of and mailed to

WILLIAM BIDDLE, Treasurer,
119 S. Fourth St., Philadelphia.

RESIDENCE: 254 S. 44th St. BELL PHONE: Bering 2084X

WILLIAM OAKES

Plumbing and Heating Contractor

ALSO LEAD BURNING

260 SOUTH TENTH STREET
PHILADELPHIA

BELL PHONE: Filbert 2666.

SEE WALKER & KEPLER

FOR

Good Electrical Work

531 CHESTNUT ST. -:- PHILA.

Philadelphia's
Representative Store

ELKINS, MORRIS & CO.

BANKERS

REPRESENTATIVES

PAUL W. BROWN
JAMES P. MAGILL

LAND TITLE BUILDING
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

RAILROAD AND PUBLIC UTILITY BONDS

FOR

CONSERVATIVE INVESTMENT.

FULL PARTICULARS ON REQUEST.

We recommend the use of
RAG FEATHERWEIGHT

(Antique Finish)

As the paper for high-grade Books and other Publications

Painting Problems Worked Out

NO CHARGE EXCEPT FOR THE MATERIAL THAT WE SELL

CONSULT

YARNALL PAINT COMPANY
MANUFACTURERS
PHILADELPHIA

ALFRED C. HAINES
Building Glass and Paints
56 N. Front St., Philadelphia.

R. C. Ballinger Ernest R. Yarnall John A. Stratton
TELEPHONES

Ball—Spruce 17-81 - - Keystone—Racn 637

R. C. BALLINGER & CO.
CONTRACTORS and BUILDERS

218 N. Thirteenth St. Philadelphia.

Letchworth Cottage
Spring Lake Beach, N. J.

Open for the Season 1918

A. C. & S. H. Letchworth

Established 1870 Both Phones

Frank W. Taylor & Son

Roofers in Tin, Tile, Slate,
Copper and Slag,
Manufacturers of Ranges
and Furnaces

FURNACES, RANGES & HOT WATER SYSTEMS
installed and cared for by expert mechanics

259 S. FOURTH ST., PHILADELPHIA

Genealogist

Elizabeth B. Gatterhwaite
14 E. Resistor St., Reading, Pa.

Baltimore & Ohio Railroad

4 1/2% Equipment

Trust Certificates

Due serially April 1, 1921-27.

Issued under the Philadelphia Plan

SECURED by standard equipment
costing twenty-five per cent. in excess
of the issue.

The Company has paid dividends on its preferred and common stocks for 18 years.

Price to yield 6%

Send for Circular PF-166.

The National City
Company

Correspondent Offices in 24 Cities
Philadelphia—1421 Chestnut St.

Telephone—555 Locust

Bonds Short Term Notes Acceptances

FOR SALE. In Media, Pa.

Dwelling house, pleasantly situated;
convenient to Philadelphia trolley and Friends' Meeting, contains eight rooms, bath and pantry; apply to

BENJ. T. LEVIS,

REAL ESTATE.

MEDIA, PA.

The Western Soup Society and Settlement House

1613 South Street, PHILADELPHIA will be glad to receive and will distribute among the worthy poor any surplus vegetables or flowers Friends may have in their gardens.
As our money is limited, please prepay express.

HENRY S. WILLIAMS, President.

